Canadians Peer Into Regional Mirrors Now

Ottawa columnist Anthony Westell recently toured Canada coast-to-coast, meeting with the leaders of government and of public and political opinion, seeking to discover how Canadians feel about their nation. These are the impressions he received.

By ANTHONY WESTELL

OTTAWA—The traveller across Canada this fall in search of national themes and priorities finds instead a deep preoccupation with regional life.

The mood is of disengagement from national affairs, and the only unity is in diversity — the tolerant acceptance that other Canadians have different lifestyles.

After the Confederation crises and the national splurge of emotion and political passion that elected Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Canadians have turned inward to the problems of everyday living.

The leaders of government and of political and public opinion within the regions of the country can often cross party and philosophical lines to agree on the nature of problems and solutions. But the region next door, or across the continent, will have quite a different list of concerns.

The four Atlantic provinces concentrate their interest on forcing the pace of economic development to narrow the gap with the wealthy West — which includes Ontario when the view is from the Atlantic Coast.

The Prairies anguish about lagging wheat sales and the consequent slippage in the regional economy.

British Columbia has its back to Ottawa, as usual, and can spare only a mild interest from its consuming drive toward The Good Life, to be realized by internal development and dynamic growth toward the new Asia.

Domestic Division in Quebec

Quebec's confrontation with English Canada has been overtaken by domestic divisions, and the quiet revolution takes the current form of a struggle for power between federalists, nationalists and separatists. The French Canadians have to redetermine their own priorities before they can renew the search for accommodation with the rest of the country.

It is partly the confused situation in Quebec which permits the other provinces to concern themselves with their own problems, after years spent concentrating on the new confederation debates.

Ontario more than any other province is beginning to recognize the mixed blessings of explosive urban growth, in which material propserity is accompanied by social strains.

Federal affairs seem almost a distraction to people intimately concerned with education and its soaring costs, populations and traffic congestion, industrial pollution and new forms of government which must somehow marry large-scale services with neighborhood democracy.

Ontario's primary concern with Ottawa at present is to secure the financial resources to cope with provincial priorities.

Western Backlash Disarmed

Across the country, the concentration on regional concerns is not accompanied by any growth of local chauvinism.

If there was ever a real western backlash against recognition of the French fact in Canada, it has sunk from sight and conversation. Bilingualism and biculturalism are broadly accepted, without enthusiasm but also without hostility.

Within Quebec, the struggle is partly about the treatment of the English minority and largely concerned with the practical limits within Canada of Quebec nationalism — after a period of years in which there often seemed to be no limits.

Atlantic Canadians feel that at long last the federal government is making a serious effort, through its new development policies, to bring them into the mainstream of Canadian prosperity. While rising expectations are likely before long to encourage rising disatisfaction, the regional mood for the present is comfortably optimistic.

Trudeaumania Hits Premiers

Federal-provincial relations in general are better than they have been for years. Many of the premiers speak openly of their respect for Trudeau, and talk privately of personal liking and friendship. This is as important in its way as the growth in the formal machinery of consultation and negotiations — a new level of government which will probably be officially legitimized in new or revised constitution.

None of this is satisfactory to those who think in slogans such as One Canada, or who seek some overriding purpose on which to focus and express national unity.

Nor is diversity of much assistance to Canadians concerned about preservation of sovereignty and wishing to encourage Canadian nationalism.

It is in fact very hard to identify and to put into words any common interest which unites Canadians from east to west and north to south, and which explains why they should live together in one country. It is much easier to find those interests which divide them and to make the case for regional autonomy.

U.S. Drifts Further Away

The great bond in the past has been the negative desire not to be Americans, and the felt need to stand together against the fatal attraction of the U.S. siren. But U.S. society is increasingly less attractive, and thus less of a threat to Canadian ways of life and institutions.

What remains to justify the Canadian experiment, and support a sophisticated concept of national unity, are the very qualities which, conventionally, threaten sovereignty and cohesion — relatively few people living in relatively small communities across vast distances.

Canadians have so far been spared the strains of the social melting pot, the extremes of nationalism, the dangers of trying to force every individual and region into one crude concept of unity. We are not yet seriously threatened by urban sprawl and excessive industrialization.

After weeks of travelling in every province and in the Northwest Territories, the dominant impressions are of distance and diversity, of a loose and sprawling federation which provides a convenient framework of government for peoples working out their different problems, at varying stages of development, more as friendly neighbors than as a close family.

This adds up to an attempt to build a different and, hopefully, better society in North America. It is in its own way an expression of unity and of Canadian purpose.

TRUDEAU TURNS 50

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Trudeau, by most accounts 46 when chosen leader 18 months ago, became 50 today.

His Zodiac horoscope, which he does not believe in, says that as a Libran, Mr. Trudeau is "deeply fond of family, religion, history, heraldry, drama; may be timid, too, and unsure" of being liked.

Separatists Critical Of Pro-Ottawa Stand

Liberal Candidate Draws Major Attack

MONTREAL (CP)—A lawyer and economist who Friday jumped into the Quebec Liberal leadership race was hours later branded as a "pseudo-economist" and "antiquated" by the separatist Parti Quebecois.

Robert Bourassa, 36-year-old Opposition financial critic, said he backs a program to make the most of federalism while French-Canadians are in power in Ottawa.

Countering this the Parti Quebecois devoted almost the entire opening of their annual convention here to attacking "the freshest face of the old parties."

OPENING TALK

Parti Quebecois leader Rene Levesque used his opening address to criticize Bourassa who once tried to convince Levesque not to quit the Liberal party.

The Liberal leadership candidate said the federal formula is the one which will ensure Quebecers the highest standard of living.

Levesque called Bourassa's ideas on the federalist system "antiquated."

Gilles Gregoire, vice-president of the Parti Quebecois, attacked Mr. Bourassa as "a pseudo-economist" who asks questions about economic effects of separation without answering them.

WILL SUPPLY ANSWERS

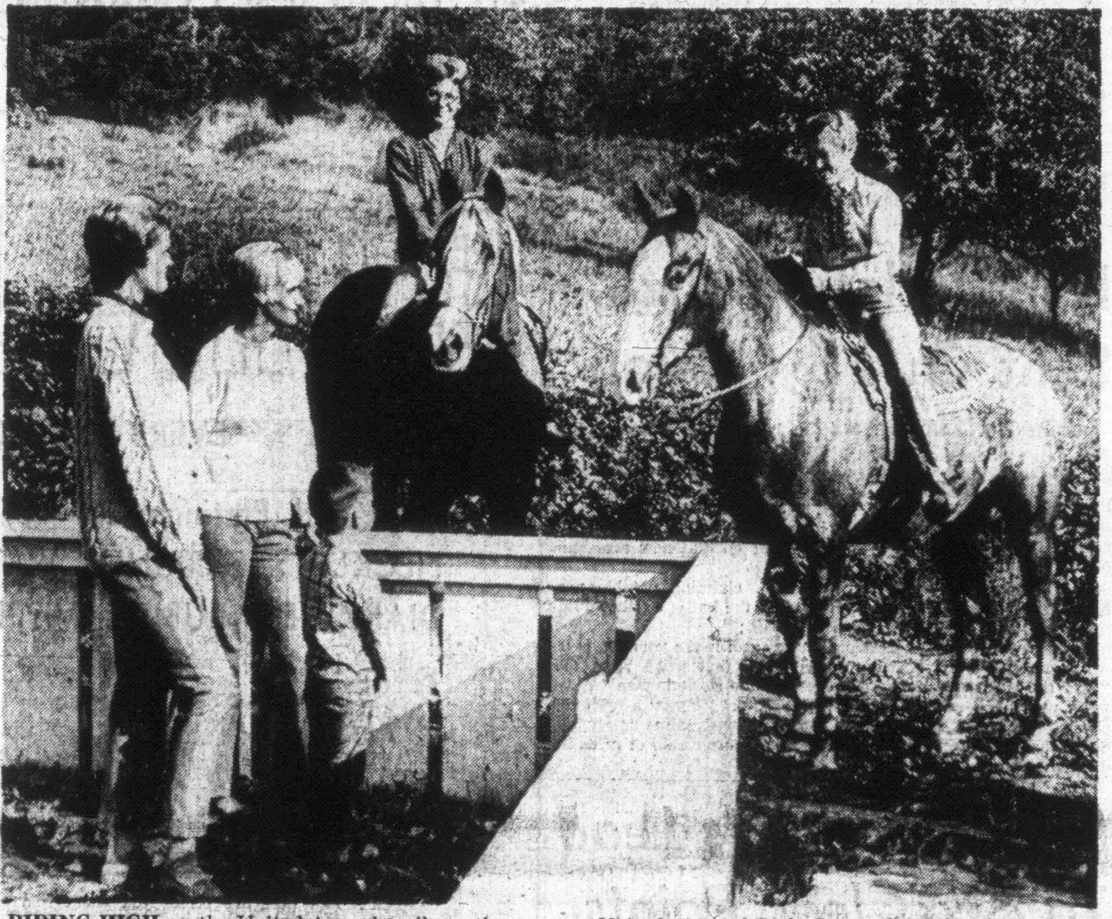
Gregoire said the answers would come from economist Jacques Parizeau, former Quebec government economic adviser who recently joined the separatist ranks.

Parizeau was given a hero's welcome at the convention, the first meeting of the Parti Quebecois since it was founded as a common separatist front one year ago.

The 39-year-old economist, a candidate for election to the party executive at the weekend convention, said he would battle against "intellectual terrorism" aimed at frightening Quebecers out of voting for the separatists.

"They have said the standard of living would drop 25 per cent because of separation. Why not 40 per cent? Or 80 per cent? They have said 1,000,000 Quebecers would leave. But why 1,000,000?"

He said he would force separatist critics to produce evidence to support such claims, carrying the debate "to a technical terrain so that people no longer launch scary accusations."



RIDING HIGH on the United Appeal trail are these two canvassers calling on homes in the Brookleigh Road area. Mrs. Norman Caldwell, mounted on Baldycat and Mrs. Wayne Wickens on Lucky take a United Appeal-Red Cross donation from Mrs. Keith Tucker, left, of 458 Brookleigh; her sister, Mrs. Gloria Burton and son Martin. Appeal goal is $694,000.

CANADIAN BISHOP MAKES PREDICTION

'Pope to Share Powers'

ROME (Reuters) — Bishop Alexander Carter of Sault Ste. Marie said Friday night he thinks Pope Paul is "most definitely more prepared" to share responsibility with the bishops after the first week of the current world-wide synod of Roman Catholic bishops.

Bishop Carter, president of the Canadian Bishops Conference, told a group of English and American journalists here that no one man, whatever his position, can be on top of all the problems facing the church today.

A greater and more intense sharing of responsibility between the Pope and his bishops was called for.

He described the synod as "a surgical operation to improve the circulation of the blood of Christ."

Bishop Carter added:

"The Pope needs, as a normal thing, to share the advice of his bishops. My only hope for the synod is that we set up an organism much more expressive of collegiality.

"Collegiality is a movement for unity within the church which goes right back to the parishes.

"The Pope should be informed about the condition of the church by the presidents of the bishops' national conferences—the natural men to keep him informed as he needs to be."

DESCRIBES SYNOD

Asked what, in his opinion, a ideally representative and permanent synod would be, he replied:

"One with proportional representation, that is what we want to work for—perhaps on the basis of one representative for every 25 bishops in a country. We must set up a way in which the church is more credible.

"Any dynamic society must be collegiate in action. This sharing of responsibility has got to be active."

Bishop Carter said the church's reaction to the Humanae Vitae papal encyclical, which condemned birth control, would have been better if the bishops had been consulted first.

"The way of presentation would have been better, more pastoral, closer to what we, the bishops, had to convey to the people afterwards," he said.

But he warned against exaggerated expectations from the present synod.

"This synod has limited possibilities. It is not a third Vatican council. It is heads of bishops conferences just meeting for a couple of weeks to improve relations between the Pope, the bishops and the people. We are not challenging the supremacy of the Pope."

Asked whether the Pope seemed more willing to share responsibility after the first week of the synod, he said:

"In my opinion he is most definitely more prepared to share."

Financial Patches Cure Sick Water—Temporarily

A temporary solution to water pollution in the system supplying Indians at Shell Beach, near Ladysmith, has been worked out by the band council and the Indian agent in Duncan.

A chlorinator will be installed to treat water once it has gone through the pumphouse to the water storage tank. It will cost between $1,000 and $2,000, said agent Ron Sampson.

Tests have shown that water at both Shell Beach and Kulleet Bay, two small communities on the reserve, are contaminated with coliform organisms.

A well dug two years ago near Kulleet Bay will be uncapped and pipes will be laid to send clean water to that community at a cost of $2,000.

The money is to be raised by reshuffling the current Duncan agency budget.

Sampson said the chlorinator at Shell Beach is a temporary measure, since supply from the reservoir in a dammed up creek is too small for expected growth of the community, which now has 16 houses.

He said chlorine will not get rid of the murkiness of the water, but it will kill the organisms that have caused disease, mostly among younger members of the band at both communities.

Band Chief Lawrence Harris, who lives at Shell Beach, said he expects a permanent solution will probably be worked out in the 1971 fiscal budget from the Duncan Indian agency.

That solution means digging a well for his community, plus installing a permanent system to Kulleet Bay, on the opposite side of the peninsula the reserve occupies.

A problem to be faced is the geology of the area. Much of the reserve is over sandstone, which makes finding a site for the well difficult.

As well as money from Indian Affairs, the band may have to chip in some of its capital fund. Rough estimates put the cost of the project at more than $5,000.

STUDENTS INVEST TOAD

LANCASTER, England (Reuters) — While the Queen visited the university in this North England town Friday, students held a mock investiture of a toad. Although the Queen did not see the ceremony, she may have heard the student cries of "Long live the toad" and "Long live the Queen." The toad, dressed in an apricot-colored robe, was invested as "Archduke of Lancaster.'

U.S. Bans Artificial Sweetener

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health Secretary Robert H. Finch ordered today that all foods and drinks containing the artificial sweetener cyclamate be removed from grocery shelves in the United States by Feb. 1 because of new evidence the substance causes cancer in animals.

Finch emphasized, however, "we have no evidence at this point that cyclamates have indeed caused cancer in humans."

Other types are not affected.

He said he would not recommend that families who now have cyclamate-containing foods and drinks in their homes throw them away or stop using them at present.

Cyclamates, which Finch estimated are a $1,000,000,000 annual industry, are found mainly in diet drinks and foods. They also are contained in a wide range of non-diet foods from bacon to canned fruits and children's vitamins.

Finch said he acted after two different laboratories presented evidence this week that cyclamates in high doses produced bladder cancer in rats and mice.

The evidence was reviewed by government scientists and a panel of the National Academy of Science, which recommended the strong restrictions on cyclamates.

Finch said beginning immediately no more cyclamates will be allowed in the production of general purpose foods and beverages.

Canadians should not be excessively alarmed by the ban, Health Minister John Munro said today.

"It is quite conceivable that we will take similar action in Canada," said Munro in a telephone interview from his office in Hamilton. "We have sent a toxicologist and pathologist to Washington immediately to examine their studies.

Dockers Begin Vote On 85-Cent Package

British Columbia's 3,200 longshoremen begin voting this weekend on a contract proposal which is expected to end the 23-day dock workers' strike.

It is expected the strike will end in time to have ships loading by Wednesday night. Sixteen are now waiting at anchor off Vancouver Island ports, three of them off Victoria.

The contract was hammered out by negotiators after marathon bargaining sessions ended Friday. It is expected the striking longshoremen will ratify it and the B.C. Maritime Employers' Association is expected to do the same.

Although the terms have not been officially announced sources close to management and union negotiators said the longshoremen have won an 85-cent-an-hour hike on top of the $3.88 base rate in a two-year contract.

First stage of the increase is a 45-cent boost, retractive to Aug. 1. The union had sought 93½ cents over two years and the employers had offered 75 cents over three years.

Andy Kotowich, Canadian area president of the union, said 600 Vancouver Island strikers will meet Monday at Nanaimo. The Lower Mainland membership meets in Vancouver Sunday.

"We should have the results by Tuesday night," Kotovich said. "If we do, and we inform the employers right away, the loading of ships should get under way by Wednesday night."

Edward Strang, president of the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association, said he is satisfied with the settlement.

Federal mediator William P. Kelly of Ottawa described it as "history making."

"It will make basic changes in methods of handling ships and container cargo that will be a model for North America," he said.

In return for the money package, employers will have greater control over operation of the work force, gang sizes on ships will be reduced although there will be no layoffs of the current force.

TEENS ESCAPISTS, SAYS SOCIOLOGIST

VANCOUVER (CP)—A survey of North Vancouver students shows that today's teen-agers are passivists trying to escape social problems rather than activists, a group of Simon Fraser University sociologists reported Friday.

This was one of the conclusions in the report based on a survey of 389 high school students.

The 132-page study was authorized by the North Vancouver school board following Halloween riots by some of the area's teen-agers two years ago. The board sought to probe the motivation of the youngsters.

It was conducted by a team of researchers headed by SFU's Dr. Gary Rush, Dr. F. B. Collinge and Dr. R. W. Wyllie.

DISILLUSIONED

They found that "the majority of young people we have been studying are disillusioned with the world around them, but are not the least bit motivated to change it.

"Instead, they have withdrawn to await growing up, to get over what they have come to believe is the 'rebelliousness of youth' and to settle down to a stable and secure life."

The typical teen-ager, the report said, sees his parents as hypocrites rationalizing between principle and practice, but he is fully prepared to be just the same when he grows up.

Dr. Rush said his team now hopes to study the parents of the teen-agers and to present a report on them next March.

WILL STUDY DROPOUTS

Also planned is a specialized report on school dropouts and the parents of these "failures".

The report differs with the frequent adult diagnosis that there aren't enough organized activities for teen-agers and that more sports and recreational facilities are often called for as a cure to youth problems.

"The young people passively accept the values of adult society," says the report. "They are competent to handle themselves but they come to doubt this because society keeps telling them they have not come of age.

"Adults, sensing this withdrawal, assume there aren't enough organized activities for them.

"This diagnosis is all wrong and the treatment only deals with the symptoms."

Other findings of the report included:

The adolescent sees school as a drag, but appreciates that it is necessary.

NOT ANTI-SOCIAL

He does not spend much time in anti-social behavior.

He usually follows dad's line in politics, but has little faith in government.

He earns about half the money he spends and doesn't tend to spend it on "trash."

More than 50 per cent of teen-agers expect to go into technical or professional careers.

Although 60 per cent expressed preference for some church, only 25 per cent attend regularly.

Jury Convicts Sailor in Traffic Case

Warren Green, 19-year-old Esquimalt sailor, was found guilty in Assize Court Friday night of dangerous driving and driving while impaired.

He had been charged with impaired driving and criminally negligent driving causing the death of Verda Lynne Fawns, 19-year-old B.C. civil servant. He was convicted on the lesser charge of dangerous driving and remanded for sentence until Wednesday at 9:30 a.m.

Miss Fawns died in a two-car collision on the Old Island Highway, near Price Road, soon after midnight on March 3.

The jury, consisting of one woman and 11 men, deliberated its verdict for more than 12 hours behind locked doors, but returned to the courtroom three times to ask guidance from Mr. Justice R. A. Wootton.

Earlier, in his charge to the jury, Mr. Justice Wootton had ruled that Green could be found guilty of criminal negligence or alternatively of the lesser offence of dangerous driving.

The jury asked for a legal definition of the difference between dangerous driving and criminal negligence. Mr. Justice Wootton said dangerous driving was defined in the Criminal Code as "driving a car in a manner dangerous to the public;" criminal negligence as "wanton or reckless disregard for the safety of the lives of other people."

In a statement to the RCMP, which was admitted as evidence, Green said he had been driving all night with some companions and had drunk a quantity of beer and rum.

He suffered cuts in the accident and was in a dazed condition when taken to the CFB Hospital at Esquimalt.

Crown counsel E. George MacMinn said a blood test taken about an hour after the accident showed a blood alcohol content of .17 per cent.

He said prosecution and defence agreed that Miss Fawns' death was due to the injuries she suffered in the collision.

Blood Clinics Open Monday

Blood donor clinics will be held for five days' next week to raise a quota of 500 units of the vital material.

The clinics will be held at Red Cross House Monday 2:30 to 4:30 p.m. and 6:30 to 9 p.m. and Tuesday 1:30 to 4:30 and 6:30 to 9 p.m.

On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the clinic will move to the Student Union building, University of Victoria, and operate from 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Donors should remember there must be a period of 90 days between donations.

Extend Emergency

LUSAKA, Zambia (Reuters)—The Zambian Parliament Friday approved a six-month extension to state of emergency regulations first introduced before independence in 1964.

PRINCE PHILIP and Mrs. Roland Michener head for car after arrival at Ottawa Friday as part of two-day visit. The prince clashed briefly and humorously with reporters at press conference today, when he said the monarchy exists for the people, and if the people don't want it "then let's end it without having a row about it." He said he was urging Prince Charles to come to Canada soon after his formal education ends. (CP Wirephoto.)

Fight-Inflation Plea Sent Out by Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon is sending personal fight-inflation appeals to 2,200 leaders of business and labor in the United States—his first concerted effort to solicit wage-price restraint.

The White House said letters from the president will be mailed Monday as a follow-up to his nationwide radio address in which he asked all citizens to "bear the burden of restraint in their personal credit and purchasing decisions, so as to reduce the pressures that help drive prices out of sight."

In his address, Nixon called on labor "to base their wage demands on the new prospect of a return toward price stability."

He urged businessmen "to base their investment and price decisions on that new economic plan."

Nixon, claiming notable progress in the battle against inflation, said:

"You can make your plans on the basis that price rises are going to be slowed down."

He did not forecast a price decline, at least immediately but rather a slower rate of price increases.

Everton Extends Lead To Six Clear Points

LONDON (CP) — John Morrissey whipped in two goals and centre-forward Joe Royle got another two in Everton's 6-2 victory over Stoke City—a win that gave Everton a six-point lead at the top of the First Division of English League soccer.

Everton now has 28 points from 16 matches, followed by Liverpool with 22 and Derby County with 21.

Liverpool struggled to a 2-2 draw at Ipswich.

Derby County, promoted from the Second Division at the end of last season, slipped to a 1-0 home defeat at the hands of Manchester City.

Only one cargo — prairie grain — was moved during the strike.

The federal government last week ordered the National Harbors Board here and the board of grain commissioners in Prince Rupert to co-ordinate and direct grain loading.

The longshoremen said before the strike started that they would handle grain but employers refused to put them to work saying that it was discriminatory against other industries to handle only grain.

Other features of the contract will open ports to a round-the-clock shift system seven days a week for bulk and general cargo handling.

The number of statutory holidays will be increased from eight to 10. Easter Monday and Boxing Day will be added.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET JR.

It wasn't so many decades ago when doctors and scientists were convinced that people caught colds, got pneumonia and other respiratory ailments in winter for the reason that they were seldom out in the great clean outdoors.

Then some epidemiologists discovered the idea that people gave each other colds and pneumonia at parties and school classes in overheated rooms was wrong.

After years of research they learned that your bodily functions vary with the seasons. You are not the same in the spring as you are in the fall. Every organ of your body behaves differently at different seasons. At certain seasons you may be resistant to one kind of disease but highly susceptible to another.

In winter, for example, your body may be less resistant to colds and respiratory infections than it was in July. The reason you may have colds this winter is because your body is biologically ready to catch them. Stuffy rooms are not to blame.

The Greater Victoria Area's Most Dangerous Intersections—Final

This is the last of the Times series on what are probably Greater Victoria's most dangerous intersections and this one—from an average driver's point of view—looks deceptively simple. But there have been 15 accidents at the junction of the Trans-Canada Highway and Burnside this year and three people have been injured. Part of the problem is slowing from highway speed to a stop at the lights. Part is the change of speed tempo from city-street to highway speed or the reverse after making a turn. The worst time is the supper rush hour. But it can be bad any time.

Senate Questions CIA's Laos Role

By BERNARD NOSSITER

WASHINGTON (UP)—A Senate inquiry has summoned Richard Helms, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, to explain the role of the CIA in the secret war in Laos.

Helms is expected to appear next week. The investigation is being conducted behind closed doors by a foreign relations subcommittee on overseas commitments under Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.).

Three military attaches from the American embassy in Viet nam has also been brought home to testify. William Sullivan, ambassador in Laos from 1964 until this year, is scheduled to be the lead-off witnes Monday. Sullivan is now a deputy assistant secretary for East Asia.

The investigation is perhap the most delicate undertaken by the subcommittee in its examination of the consequences of global involvements. The United States and the Laotian government have never admitted publicly that Washington plays a role in the struggle.

However, American participation is believed to be extensive and on two fronts. United States B-52s are reported to be flying as many as 200 sorties a day from bases in Thailand and South Vietnam, bombing the Ho Chi Minh trail in Laos. North Vietnam sends men and supplies down this eastern route to South Vietnam.

ARMS, ADVISERS

In addition, the United States is providing arms, advisers, transportation and bombing support to the royalist-neutralist government of Laos for its war in the north against the leftist Pathet Lao and their North Vietnamese allies.

American military aid to the Laotian government has been estimated as high as $200 million a year or four times as much as the economic assistance.

The Symington committee has refused to disclose either its witness list or the line of questions that will be purued. However, it is likely that Helms will be asked about reported 300 CIA agents said to be operating in the Laotian war. Many are reported to be former Green Berets, recruited to lead Laotion units on reconnaissance missions and terrorist raids.

Soldier and supplies for the war are carried by Air America and Continental Air Serive. The two airlines are said to be CIA-operated.

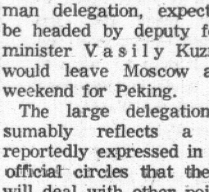
SOVIET DELEGATION TO PEKING

MOSCOW (WP) — Progress toward Sino-Soviet border talks in continuing even though the two sides may have conflicting expectations, usually reliable sources said Friday.

They predicted that a 38-man delegation, expected to be headed by deputy foreign minister Vasily Kuznetsov would leave Moscow at the weekend for Peking.

The large delegation presumably reflects a belief reportedly expressed in Soviet official circles that the talks will deal with other points at issue between the two Communist powers in addition to border tensions.



BELTONE PUTS ITS COMPUTER TO WORK TO HELP YOU HEAR BETTER WITH AN EYEGLASS HEARING AID THAT LOOKS BETTER!

The result? BELTONE'S new GRANDE, our slimmest, lightest and most efficient eyeglass hearing-aid BELTONE has ever built.

True, there have been hearing glasses before. But the GRANDE is different. So different, in fact, that you can put them side by side with many ordinary eyeglasses, and chances are you'll have trouble picking out the GRANDE at first glance. That's how STREAMLINED the temples really are!

Of course, there's more to the GRANDE than modern styling and sleek, contemporary design. A lot more . . .

. . . like "quick as a wink" conversion to reading or sunglasses.

. . . like BELTONE'S Front-focus hearability — now with minimum distortion for extra-clear hearing.

. . . like rugged "day-in, day-out" reliability with the latest version of BELTONE'S patented Micro-Module Circuit Amplifier.

. . . like long, LONG battery life — with new, long-life Mercury cells becoming available which the GRANDE was designed to use.

There are so MANY improvements; in fact, some of which would have been impossible without the help of a computer, that this is the type of aid you would expect "sometime in the 70s." But, thanks to BELTONE'S advanced engineering, YOU CAN HAVE THIS HEARING AID OF THE 70s NOW!

Frankly, I think you, yourself, will like the GRANDE — and that you will find it is a hearing aid that really looks good on you. Why not see for yourself? I'll be happy to show you the BELTONE GRANDE, either in my office or in your home. I'll also be glad to give you a FREE electronic hearing test if you haven't had one within the last year. In either case, there's absolutely NO COST OR OBLIGATION on your part.

Curbing the Runaway

IN CALLING FOR A COMPULSORY freeze on prices to combat inflation the Canadian Labor Congress and the Confederation of National Trade Unions have seized on only part of the problem. Since a rise of prices is the chief means by which an inflationary situation in the economy is demonstrated, price control without similar restrictions on the factors which produce price increases would in effect be a blow at the evidence of inflation rather than at its causes.

While urging strict prohibition of price increases, the labor organizations were equally emphatic in rejecting restraints on wage increases. Wages were categorized as a form of income, as of course they are, and the labor spokesmen argued that unless all other forms of income—profits, rents, interest, professional fees, returns from real estate speculation — were likewise controlled, there would be discrimination against labor. That argument has some validity. But wages may be classified not only as a form of income but also as a cost of production. And in many products it is by far the greatest item of cost. So regulation of wages would constitute a greater step toward keeping prices down than would similar action in regard to other items on the list.

The fact is, however, that for a significant curb on inflation through government order all factors contributing to price increases would have to be included. Certainly, prices and wages would have to be linked. Administration of any such vast and complex controls would entail an enormous mechanism for checking and enforcing the regulations, with all the costs that this implies. And the difficulties of full-scale enforcement of such controls have been demonstrated from time to time in various countries.

But the real question is whether even fully-enforced controls of this nature could be really effective. For while each item of cost may be considered to be a factor in the rising price index, it is also in a sense a result of the other factors. The squirrel is at once the motive force and the hurrying victim of its whirling cage.

Frozen prices could result in a cessation of investment, a halt in the creation of additional production units, an increase in unemployment and possibly a good many business closures. The influence of foreign situations could create serious problems, for a maladjustment of prices could soon occur. A high pressure could conceivably build up so that at the end of the one or two-year term proposed by the labor organizations, the price spiral would resume at increased pace and erode what benefits had been achieved.

One of the basic factors in inflation resides in the relationship between productivity and wages. If wages as a form of income increase more quickly than does the production which wages as a form of cost buy for the employer, then an inflationary effect will result. If there is more purchasing power abroad in the land than there are goods to satisfy it, then one of the basic inflationary situations is created. If productivity per worker increases more quickly than production costs, including wages, then a softening of prices should result, and a consequent cooling of inflationary pressures.

Manipulating only one of the economic factors can do little by itself to curb inflation. An even more fundamental attack is necessary, involving domestic monetary and fiscal policy—and the policies of giant neighbors too.

In the end, inflation appears to contain many psychological factors such as public fear, confidence and anticipation. If everyone believes prices are going up they will act accordingly — they will buy today rather than postpone purchases—and so contribute to the very phenomenon they are trying to avoid. Clearly a massive and sustained educational program is an important part of any anti-inflationary fight. Certainly it is a necessary preliminary to any success from voluntary guidelines, which the labor bodies have termed "highly impractical" on past experience.

A Man of Action

WHEN THE LIBERAL PARTY leadership contest was concluded in 1968 with the election of Mr. Trudeau to succeed Mr. Pearson, the runner-up in that contest, Mr. Robert H. Winters, was said by those close to him to be prepared to drop quietly out of the Canadian political scene. Mr. Winters, it was said, felt at the age of 57 that he had half-a-dozen or more years of activity still before him and wanted to put them to the best use.

To the great regret of his friends and associates, and in a tragic loss to the nation which he had served so well, those years were not granted to him. Robert Winters died last week, in harness as a top-ranking business executive as he had wished, and he leaves a memory of integrity, ability and active achievement which was reflected in all that he did. In a notable political career beginning with his election to Parliament in 1945, Mr. Winters held important cabinet posts and made his influence felt in numerous fields. He was a man of action, and channeled his energy into showing results.

It was a loss to Canadian politics when he decided to return to the world of commerce last year, for his firm convictions regarding economic and financial policy would have been valuable in today's struggle against national deficits and inflation.

In one of his recent published comments, he summed his philosophy up in the words: "I have nothing more personally that I can gain. I'd like now perhaps to do a little more to help others."

It makes a good epitaph for a good Canadian.

Spending to Save More

LESS NOTICED THAN OTHER items discussed at last month's Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police conference in Edmonton was a significant motion approving expanded parole and noting that this would call for more staff. At a time of austerity in federal affairs, the move might be expected to encounter opposition, but before it is dismissed out of hand, the supporting argument of the police chiefs deserves consideration.

They note that since the proclamation of the Parole Act in February 1959, parole has been demonstrated as an effective method of controlling sentenced offenders in the community at considerable benefit both in terms of financial cost and in salvaging offenders from future lives of crime. Offenders not selected for parole have been released without supervision even during the period for which remissions shorten their terms. They walk out of prison without support or control of an official nature which might steer them away from a return to former bad habits or companions.

A proposed amendment to the Parole Act would require parole for the latter type of prisoner until the expiry of time for which he received remissions, and the chiefs favor this. But the job cannot be done unless there are sufficient parole officers to do it. Hence the pleas for staff increases adequate to make the case loads feasible. Hiring more men would cost money. Not hiring them could cost a lot more—a point for consideration in a government era of economy.

Judgment, Not Bill 33

Mr. Peterson claims Bill 33 protects us from what happened in Montreal. In fact, the police strike there was also illegal.

The only thing preventing the same thing from happening here is the good judgment of our policemen, not his Bill 33. — L. Waye, 3139 Blackwood.

Try Welfare Life

This is for all those people who seem to think we belong in the slum and are trying to keep us there. Oh they call themselves good Christian people even though they haven't got a Christian bone in their body. Just for one month I would like to see the whole of Victoria living the same, and on the same amount, as a person on welfare—no charge accounts or credit included. Let the stores go broke for one month. Try and give your children a Christmas like every other child. Buy your stuff at Goodwill you say? Hah, you haven't seen their prices lately for some of that crap.

Don't forget some of you are going to wind up like our pensioners today, in one room with not enough food to eat and you'll be the loudmouth crying for a raise.—Mrs. J. Martin, 2850 Dysart.

THE LOSS OF ROBERT WINTERS

By BRUCE HUTCHISON

Where Are the Doers to Complement the Thinkers?

ALL the obituaries written about the late Robert Winters agree that his death was a heavy loss to the nation. But the worst loss had occurred before his death when he suddenly left politics. Apart from the personal misfortune of a fine man taken far too early, it was a public misfortune that the political system could find no room for his outstanding abilities. Some Canadians may suppose that Mr. Winters went back to private business in anger because he had failed, by a few votes, to win the Liberal party leadership. This is not true. He retired because he had concluded that he was not really wanted in the Trudeau cabinet — not, at any rate, on workable terms. Though we may never know the exact truth about his conversations with the newly-chosen prime minister, Mr. Winters' judgment, I have reason to believe, was right.

Hutchison

Of course, he could have taken a major portolio, but he was convinced that he would be neither happy nor effective under the changed conditions. So, without complaint or a backward glance, he departed — an honorable decision and typical of him. For I doubt that our public life in Canada ever produced a more honorable man or a better human being. And his private life, touched with both success and sorrow, always denied the cheap, cynical legend that the profession of politics is somehow less honorable than others.

The disagreement between Mr. Winters and Mr. Trudeau, each highly gifted in different fashions, would be only a rather sad historical footnote if it did not have a contemporary meaning. But it seems to have such a meaning. It means, I suspect, that Mr. Trudeau, the thinker, philosopher and subtle communicator, is uneasy among men of action. If so, he is in danger of making a grave mistake.

Mr. Winters was not a thinker, philosopher or communicator and his nature held no subtlety. He was a blunt man of action, superb and unexcelled in his field. One would have thought, therefore, that his gifts of directness and simplicity were perfectly designed to complement the intricate, mysterious gifts of the prime minister, since all our successful governments have been precisely this coalition of opposites.

Precedents

Every successful prime minister of the past was able to use men of contradictory temperaments, even when they disagreed and often quarrelled behind the cabinet doors. Thus Macdonald and Brown, lifelong enemies, built Confederation. Then Macdonald worked with Cartier and other men quite unlike their leader, as Laurier worked with Sifton and Fielding, as King managed to get along with Lapointe, whom he loved, with St. Laurent whom he respected and envied, with Howe, Crerar and Power, whom he could never understand, with Ilsley, Angus Macdonald and Gardiner whom he detested as they detested him, and for a long time with Ralston whom he could not master and finally destroyed.

Canadian government reached its peak in wartime when King assembled a group of colleagues more able, as a group, than any predecessors or successors. That was his peculiar, cold genius at its best, the genius of choosing the right men and letting them do their own work in their own way. The practical question now is whether Mr. Trudeau can do the same — whether he can turn his government into a team, a working organism which, like a human body, needs hands as well as brains, men of action as well as philosophers.

At the start Mr. Trudeau had beside him two men of action and only two of the first rank. Mr. Winters withdrew, for his own reasons. Paul Hellyer remained but later withdrew also, for similar reasons. Neither felt that he was wanted.

After these resignations there is no doubt that the government has plenty of brains but has it enough competent hands? The government can think, plan and draw shiny charts of the future but can it act? Can it manage the vast daily business of the modern state? An interesting question, as yet unanswered.

Theoretician

Mr. Trudeau understands the modern state in theory, none better, but his practical experience in business of any kind is very limited. This need not be a fatal lack in any statesman. Churchill, Roosevelt and King, to take three familiar examples from the same era, were not businessmen. The life of business, indeed, seldom produces a statesman simply because business and statecraft are two entirely different things, usually in conflict. But the statesman can never do without the businessman to execute his policy which may be perfect in theory and ruined in action.

Assuming that Mr. Trudeau is as brilliant as his reputation, he must feel by now the shortage of men like Messrs. Winters and Hellyer, who had not only great personal abilities but also nationwide constituencies and broad support everywhere. If any minister in the existing government, apart from the prime minister himself, has a national constituency in the true sense I am unaware of his name.

What Is Growing?

Under the spreading, noble beech tree, it is said, no other trees can grow. What, in national terms, is growing under the leadership of Mr. Trudeau? Where are the doers to complement the thinkers in a government that can plan a Just Society but cannot deliver the mail on time?

The prime minister will answer such questions when he is ready, or they will answer themselves in performance, not words. We may be sure, meanwhile, that if Mr. Winters or Mr. Hellyer were running the post office the mail would move on time. If either of them had been minister of finance the budget would have been balanced long ago and much unnecessary trouble avoided.

Mr. Trudeau's danger, in short, is not a lack of theory. It is a lack of men unlike himself, men willing and able to disagree with him, men to balance his special talents, men, above all, who are given the chance to develop their own.

This is the lesson that all our truly successful prime ministers, learned by painful experience. They were few in number, six at most. It is too early yet to guess whether Mr. Trudeau will join them in history. He will not unless he finds men of diverse aptitudes, sets them to work freely and lets them grow.

FROM UNITED NATIONS, N.Y.

By WILLIAM R. FRYE

A Chinese Chinook Cools Russia to the West

ONE mystery now has been cleared up. It is why Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko spent so much of his time in New York last month sitting on a diplomatic cake of ice. The reason is that four days before Gromyko and United States Secretary of State William P. Rogers had their first working dinner, China backed down from its confrontation with the Soviet Union along their mutual frontier. Moscow and Peking had been eyeball-to-eyeball, and Peking blinked. This meant that pressure on Moscow to come to terms with the West had been very substantially eased.

Frye

The chronology of events is eloquent, and may well prove to have embraced one of history's significant turning points. This is what happened:

- September 11: Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin flew to Peking and met Chinese Premier Chou En-lai at the airport. Chou agreed to seek a "normalization" of "state relations."
- September 18: China sent a note to Moscow proposing a mutual pullback of troops from the frontier—a step comparable to Nikita Khrushchev's agreement, in 1962, to "mutual" Soviet-American restraint in the Cuba-missile crisis.
- September 22, 26, 30: Gromyko and Rogers met in New York, doing very little diplomatic business.
- October 7: Peking agreed to border negotiations with Moscow.

This coming week, if advance information proves correct, the Sino-Soviet negotiations will begin. Whether there is an early agreement or not—and it seems highly unlikely—the very fact of the talks will continue to drain explosive steam from the Moscow-Peking confrontation.

This, in turn, will continue to have profound impact on Soviet-American relations. When there is a danger of war with China, Moscow is under pressure to stabilize its western frontier. When there is not, cold-war objectives in the West can safely be pursued.

There had been considerable hope that Gromyko would at least set a date for the beginning of strategic arms limitation (SALT) talks with the United States. Some optimists had also hoped for help in settling the Mideast and Vietnam conflicts.

These things may yet be forthcoming, but if so, there has been little from Gromyko to indicate it. It is obvious that Soviet-American relations are marking time while the Kremlin explores the possibilities of detente with China.

China's backdown September 18 may well have been designed in part to accomplish precisely that: to prevent too intimate and far-reaching a Soviet-American rapprochment. Peking has made clear repeatedly that she fears "collaboration" between Moscow and Washington.

This is a game which Washington, too, can play. The triangle of relations among Moscow, Peking and Washington offers opportunities for pressures in all three—indeed, in all six—directions.

Improbable though it may seem to westerners, Moscow fears that the United States and Red China may one day gang up on her. It does no harm to nourish this fear; it tends to encourage Soviet amenities toward the West.

Thus 24 hours after Peking agreed to negotiate with Moscow, Washington officials began leaking word that Peking might want a rapprochment with the United States, too.

There had been overtures, it was indicated, and they would be reciprocated by Washington. Specifically there was a prospect, it was hinted, that Chinese-American talks in Warsaw might resume.

Much of this is psychological warfare, but it is deadly serious business. Efforts by Canada and Italy to draw China out of its shell are part of the whole. They underline, for Moscow's benefit, the warning: beware of possible future isolation; China and the West may not forever be at odds.

Historic Importance

Where this triangular tug-of-war will end, no one can know. But it is entirely possible that when the history of our times is written, it will be recorded that the great opportunity for a reversal of alliances—Russia and the West joining forces against China—was lost between the summer of 1968 and the fall of 1969.

President Johnson was ready for a summit meeting with the Russians in August, 1968. The SALT talks were to have begun. Russia was mobilizing along the Chinese frontier, and there were indications she was considering preventive war.

Then came Czechoslovakia, and the Soviet-American detente was jolted off the tracks. It has yet to get back on—and may never do so. It may now be too late.

China and Russia have set out to compose the worst of their differences and Russia has put detente with the West on the shelf. A page in history has been turned.

Nature Rambles

By FREEMAN KING

To see an ever-changing pattern of colors—and perhaps now at their very best—take a drive out on the Island Highway to Goldstream flats, then turn back to the campsites.

As you leave the overpass at Thetis, the pattern is one of the brown foliage of the garry oaks and the brown tassels of the ocean spray. In some of the low places the red of a few osier dogwood shows.

Further along the way some of the maples come into view. These are yellow, and hanging on the underside of the leaves will be the dark brown clusters of the winged seeds.

Pull over to the side of the road and look at the wonderful bright green shiny leaves of the arbutus. A short while ago they seemed to be dead. Here we will see many dogwoods, each a little different in color and formation. These will range from a very pale yellow to a mottled red. No two leaves seem to be the same color yet the whole make a beautiful pattern.

As you go down the hill towards the Goldstream river, where it runs beside the road, look at the young firs and red cedars growing on the banks. Here is a complete change.

When you get to the concrete bridge a wonderful array of color greets you for there is an abundance of maples. The color range and pattern are for the camera fans. Words can hardly describe the scene nature has created with a little frost. Hues range from yellows, oranges, reds to dusky light brown and bright green.

Mingled with the maples are the alders, carrying brownish foliage. On the same branch we can find the new bright green of the catkins and the ball-like cone of next year's fruit crop.

Some willows among them have put on an attractive arrangement of colors. Each clump seems to be different.

Turn in at the picnic site and walk over the carpet of leaves. See if you can find two that are the same shape and color. Like people, no two are exactly alike.

In the stream each leaf seems to float in a different way, some turning left, while others turn to the right.

Now, drive back to the campsite where the whole pattern changes. The alders are still green and do not seem to have been touched by frost.

There are some maples along the road that have a different color, less brilliant than those below.

In this setting the tall, clean trunks of the Douglas firs dominate the scene.

But, on the Other Hand He May Be in Wrong Job

THE WASHINGTON POST
An Editorial

Sometimes we think that President Nixon missed his calling. He should have been an editorial writer.

Mr. Nixon seems to know all our professional secrets; he slips with ease into each and every one of those dreadful locutions that are as highminded as they are off the mark and which (we try to think) we only use when the hour is late, the typewriter stuck and the issue layered in fog, mud and glue.

You know the crowd we mean—"men of good will" and their fellow amorphs, who can be called upon "without fear or favor," to "cease the bootless acrimony."

Well, they—"men of good will"—have some blackguard cousins of whom we have all become too fond over the years; but it has been left to Mr. Nixon to exploit them to such a degree that we have begun to fear for their safety. We are thinking of our old friends, "extremists on both sides."

Consider Mr. Nixon's recent press conference remarks:

"Well, on this very difficult problem I would say first that we've had a lot of criticism from the South in so far as our integration and desegregation policies are concerned, as well as from the groups (many civil rights groups) to which you refer.

"It seems to me that there are two extreme groups. There are those who want instant integration and those who want segregation forever. I believe that we need to have a middle course between those two extremes. That's the course on which we're embarked.

"I think it is correct . . . We are for it (desegregated education), but we are going to avoid extremes."

Now, Mr Nixon said a lot of other peculiar things that day about his administration's desegregation policy.

For instance he took credit for "progress" on this front that had in fact been made by the Johnson administration and — if anything — retarded by his own. And he defended his retreat on desegregation in Mississippi by declaring the preferability of his action to a cutoff of funds, even though a cutoff was not at issue in Mississippi.

Still, it was the president's remarks about those ideological bookends that captured our attention and continues to engage it.

The "Extremist" formulation has built-in dangers—especially if you are trying to run a country, not just trying to tell someone else how to do it in a few hundred well-chosen words every morning.

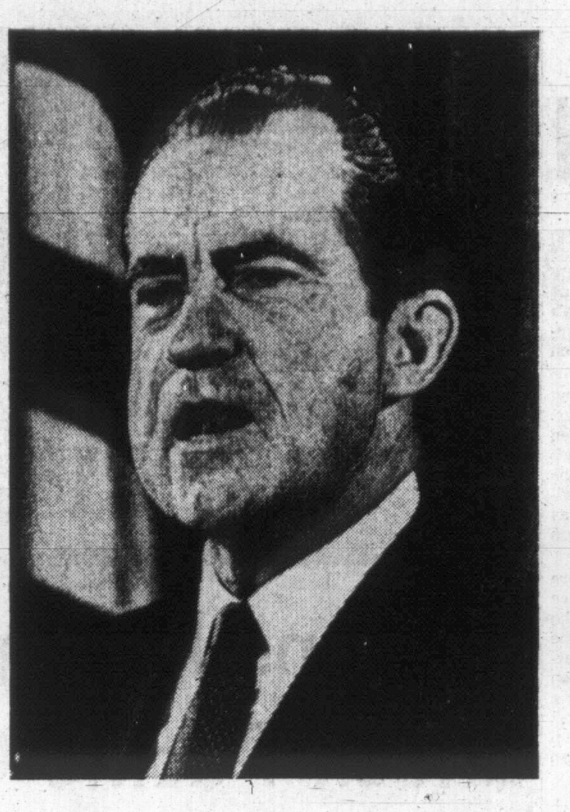
Habitually placing oneself at a midpoint between extremes (real or imagined) lets the extremes define the middle: it is a sliding position, no position.

Then again, there is the matter of "both" sides. Both? Most issues have around a hundred and ninety-two sides — unless they are complicated, and in which case they, of course, have more. So there is also the danger of getting to think about things in a highly oversimplified way.

But finally there is the overriding danger, with which we are not unfamiliar, that someone somewhere will start wondering just who these extremists are.

If we were of a mind to, we might point out that the "extremists" to whom Mr. Nixon referred must necessarily be taken to include Father Hesburgh and the Civil Rights Commission, the majority of attorneys working in the civil rights division of Attorney-General Mitchell's justice department, the Senate Republican minority leader, Hugh Scott, and the U.S. commissioner of education whom Mr. Nixon appointed and whose office worked out the plan his administration junked.

But we are not of a mind to do a thing like that. We just would like to urge that Mr. Nixon—out of compassion, if nothing else—give our overworked friends a rest.



O Say, Can You Hear Man on the Ranch?

I. F. STONE'S WEEKLY

Whom the gods would destroy, they first drive inane. At his press conference the other day it was hard to distinguish Nixon from Agnew.

He implied that to criticize his slowdown in Southern school desegregation — 15 years after the Brown decision — was to ask for "instant integration!"

He could see no ethical problem in replacing Fortas, the judicial moonlighter, with Haynsworth, the judiciary's most absent-minded stock speculator.

He said there were no American combat troops in Laos, except maybe in certain activities he did not care to discuss.

He denied there was any numbers game in picturing the cancellation of 50,000 draft calls for November and December as a sign of approaching peace in Vietnam, although from June to October he had drafted 56,000 more men than last year and four days earlier the Pentagon had announced as an economy move that it would be taking 70,300 fewer men into the armed services.

He rejoiced that at the UN he had found "no significant criticism" of U.S. policy in Vietnam; the Secret Service must have rushed him through the delegates' lounge pretty fast.

He is against the Goodell bill to remove all U.S. troops from Vietnam by Dec. 1, 1970, because he wants to get them out sooner, but it is better not to let the enemy know because that would destroy his incentive to negotiate.

All we need to bring peace he said is a "united front" at home. The united front hasn't been advocated so openly since the 1937 convention of the Communist party.

As for the student moratorium and the other anti-war demonstrations planned for this fall, Nixon said "under no circumstances" would he "be affected whatever." Before making that remark, he should have phoned that man down on the ranch.

'Trying to Pump Air Into Deflated Legend'

By PETER C. NEWMAN
Toronto Star

John Diefenbaker's political career deserves better pallbearers than Robert Coates, the Tory MP from the Maritimes whose The Night of the Knives was published last week.

Issued by Brig. Michael Wardell's Brunswick Press, the book is a sloppy compendium of historical distortions, unintentionally humorous diversions, and fanciful excursions — all cast in a black-and-white world of Coates' own making.

At the same time, Robert Coates reveals to an unsuspecting public that much of Canada's recent political history swirled around a Maritime MP named Robert Coates.

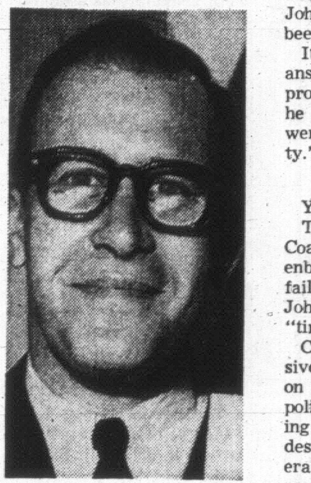
He dashes in and out of nearly every one of the book's sixteen chapters, fending off the Toronto-based "power brokers" intent on plunging blunt knives into The Chief's innocent, quivering flesh.

The cumulative effect of the Coates book is to establish a new category of Canadian writing; it's our first political penny-dreadful.

Not that Coates isn't sufficiently dedicated to his double objective of glorifying John Diefenbaker and vilifying Dalton Camp.



COATES

His descriptions of Camp, the cool Toronto ad man, are bizarre. Coates calls him an "assassin" afflicted with "blood-lust" (whatever that is) and "an unquenchable thirst for power." At one point he actually accuses Camp of "dastardly deeds."

"Along with his ability with words," concludes Coates (who doesn't share it), "were feet of clay."

Camp's supporters are put down as "young storm troopers" full of "insufferable arrogance."

Coates rounds out his chapter on the September, 1966, Conservative annual meeting, where Dalton Camp won his fight for re-assessment of the party leadership, with a description typical of the book's milder passages: "Like Brutus, Camp's knife had blood on it when he withdrew it, but it was not John Diefenbaker's blood. It was the blood of the Progressive Conservative party."

Fortunately, there is some comic relief in The Night of the Knives when Coates undertakes his defence of John Diefenbaker.

Coates calls him "the winningest leader of the Conservative party," and rhetorically asks his readers: "What would Canada be today if John Diefenbaker had not been Prime Minister?"

It's a tempting question to answer, but perhaps Coates provides his own reply when he writes: "As he went, so went the (Conservative) party."

Yeah. Downhill all the way.

The problem faced by Coates (and most other Diefenbaker idolaters) is that they fail to differentiate between John Diefenbaker's "life" and "times."

Certainly, he is an impressive figure. Canadian history on the hoof. Here is a rare political leader with an abiding love of country who tried desperately to bring his federal administration into a more meaningful relationship with "the average Canadian."

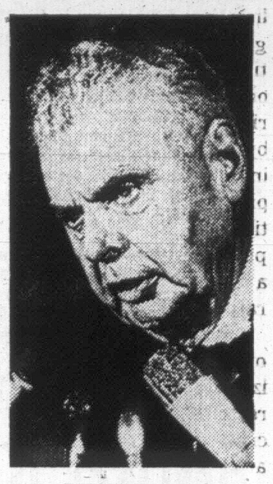
But even though John Diefenbaker is a great human being (in the sense that he fills the space around him and the ground he stands on is his), the man from Prince Albert was not a great prime minister, and in the end not even a good politician.

Elected in 1958 with a record parliamentary majority, once in office John Diefenbaker became more concerned with being liked than being respected.

He viewed legislation as more of a posture than a process, and never achieved any clear purpose except to retain himself in power.

By the time his government disintegrated in the winter of 1963, his behavior in office had shocked the established and amused the detached.

Robert Coates belongs to neither of these groups.



DIEFENBAKER

He—and most of John Diefenbaker's most loyal disciples —have become politicians without a leader.

I felt genuine sympathy bordering on grief when I read Coates confess: "John Diefenbaker made me comfortable as a Conservative."

The trouble is that Coates in his book is trying to pump air into a deflated legend.

"Today John Diefenbaker is in constant demand from coast to coast," he writes. "His appeal to the youth of the nation is unbelievable when one considers it was the youth of the party that Dalton Camp turned to in his assault on the leadership."

This may be true in Prince Albert, Sask., and Amherst, N.S., where Bob Coates comes from. But in the rest of Canada the Diefenbaker Years are well over, and all of the public yearning of his still ardent admirers can't bring them back.

Visitors From Another Land

By RICHARD NEEDHAM

My favorite philosopher, George Santayana, had many distinguished friends, among them the Marchesa Iris Origo.

When her little boy died, he wrote to her: "We have no claim to any of our possessions. We have no claim to exist; and as we have to die in the end, so we must resign ourselves to die piecemeal, which really happens when we lose somebody or something that was closely intertwined with our existence."

This would seem a wise attitude to take towards children. They are not possessions, we have no claim on them, they owe us nothing.

They are lent to us, you might say, and are taken away by death, or, more commonly today, by the natural process of growing up.

A wise woman once told me that children were visitors from another country, they were guests in the home, and should be treated accordingly.

Would we be angry at an Arab visitor because his views and tastes differed from our own?

Of course not; we'd have the courtesy to allow him his "differentness," we would probably find it attractive and interesting; should we not do the same for children, letting them be different too? Kahlil Gibran has written well of this:

'Your children are not your children. They are the sons and daughters of life's longing for itself. They come through you but not from you, and though they are with you yet they belong not to you. You may give them your love but not your thoughts, for they have their own thoughts. You may house their bodies but not their souls, for their souls dwell in the house of tomorrow, which you cannot visit, not even in your dreams. You may strive to be like them, but seek not to make them like you. For life goes not backward nor tarries with yesterday."

If, as many parents complain, you don't understand your child, perhaps you're not meant to; he's a stranger, and you'll have to take him as such.

Then again, there are parents who complain that their children don't love them, but isn't that something the child has to decide? Love cannot be exacted from anyone; it can only be given or, as the case may be, not given.

I wonder, too, if such parents aren't defining "love" on their own terms.

When they say the child doesn't love them, what they mean is that he doesn't obey them in everything, or measure up to all their expectations.

Surely, you can love someone while defending your right to be your own self and live your own life, while refusing to be dominated or heckled by them.

But perhaps it's better for parents and children to like, than to love, each other. Barbara Lord writes from Willowdale:

"A great deal is talked about children loving their parents. I have two teen-age children and what I would really be happy to know is that they like me. I have brought them up — or tried to — with the idea that when they are through their formal education they will leave home and go to another city and support themselves. I hope and pray they will do this and that there will be no animosity between us, ever. But as to this thing about the great love between parents and children, I do not believe it exists and I think it is good that it does not exist. I have seen too many young lives ruined by 'mother love.' "

It's hard work being a parent; harder these days, perhaps, than ever before, because parents expect so much of the child — and of themselves in relationship to it.

Most of them strive so hard to do the "right" things and to avoid all the "wrong" things, that they're understandably baffled and enraged when the child turns out to be, in his own individual style, as bad as they are and perhaps worse.

"Where did we go wrong?" Where did anything go wrong? Where (which is more to the point) did anything ever go right?

You can't force kids to be something other than they are; you can't cage them up to keep them out of trouble; you pretty well have to take what you get — just as kids themselves have to take the parents they get.

I've often reflected that all a parent can really do is to treat his kids with respect, play it straight with them, set them as good an example as he can, hope for the best, and be willing (as we all must do in life) to settle for something less.

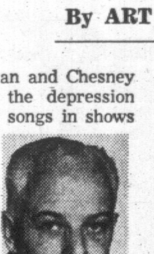
And the Greatest of These Once Used to Be Charity

By ART STOTT



Stott

When the late Bud Flanagan and Chesney Allen were sentimentalizing the depression years in Britain with popular songs in shows of the top-billed "Crazy Gang", they produced a number about nice people with no money. As the lyrics ran, the father helped the mother, the mother helped her brother and when they were running short of cash they borrowed from each other—"Nice people, with nice manners, but got no money at all."

Sung in front of the curtain at London's Victoria Palace, the song was a hit, struck a responsive human chord and became a humming and toe-tapping selection for thousands.

It was easy enough to appreciate the theme—particularly if you'd never been hungry, never lacked a bed at night and had always been clothed warmly, even if you were not dining on gourmet food, if your mattress was a little harder or lumpier than you liked and if your clothes weren't tailored on Saville Row. A lot of us were in that latter category. In our family we learned different ways to cook hamburger and season stew, and I went to school in blue serge pants shiny before my mother cut them from the back of my father's discarded jackets. Our roof sheltered, beside my parents, two grandparents, an uncle and aunt and my sister as well as me. Mutual aid was the family slogan among the elders. We were lucky. We never had to seek public help.

We had a garden. It provided most of the vegetables we needed and a fair range of fruit. When we had a surplus we gave to our neighbors and they, in turn, gave to us. At times we were even able to donate to the Friendly Help—generally usable clothes we had outgrown and, once in a while, a small cash donation.

We did not know how the recipients felt when they accepted our contributions and I suppose no one who has not been in their position can ever fully appreciate their sentiments.

Still, in those days, charity was an honorable word, placed by some slightly higher in the scale than faith and hope. And "the poor" was an abstract concept in no way related to the youngsters with whom we played or their parents, who may have been forced to accept help.

That was a distant age. The family was normally a three-generation unit. Victoria was a small town. The Friendly Help people were neighbors because we didn't have a big enough population to escape neighborliness. They knew on whom they could call when someone required a hand—and they were discreet in the distribution of assistance. Donors remained anonymous and so did the people who were assisted.

The loose organization could not stand the depression strains of the 'thirties. Relief had to be organized, supported by governments. The hamper of food and the occasional parcel of clothing gave way to the welfare allowance—cash for which registered unfortunates had to make formal application and collect, usually in person, at relief headquarters. Charity lost the personal touch and broken pride corroded its shining surface.

Since then we've changed the family pattern. The home is now conventionally a two-generation arrangement until the children grow up. Then it subdivides again. And most of us have become affluent—making the division between the comfortable and the uncomfortable more definite. Help for the latter is an impersonal thing, the gift of a lump donation to a united appeal, the paying of government funds to classified recipients. And, as perceptive writers keep pointing out, we operate under a system in which the rich get richer and the poor get relatively poorer, partly because the latter pay more when they haven't cash for what they want or need.

It is still possible for the underprivileged to escape poverty. The Horatio Alger principle is applicable in some cases, but the number that can practise it shrinks as a percentage of the population.

Even in comfortable Victoria we have families entering the third generation on welfare. In the nature of things, some among them, joined by others without such long histories of dependence, are sharpening hostilities against the "rich", which means anyone who is better off than they. The growing bitterness produces its counter reaction among some of the more fortunate. There are very few extremists in either group who have abandoned humanity. There's no chorus from one side saying "Let 'em work or starve" nor from the other advocating the torch to destroy the cities—but there are occasional voices parroting the themes.

So what do we do now?

Some of my acquaintances have convinced themselves that their dogmas for political and economic change are the only answer. They may be right, but the failures of Utopian experiments to date don't strengthen their case.

We can't return to the simpler days of the Friendly Help, with hampers and parcels of clothing. We might benefit, though, from an attempt to personalize relationships to a greater extent than at present. Impersonal organization doesn't seem to fill the bill. And perhaps we could and should revive the concept that of the abiding virtues, charity is the greatest—not a dirty word, and not related solely to material aid required by those in need.

Big Robber Hunted

MELBOURNE (AP) — In one of their biggest manhunts ever, Australian police today are looking for Ronald Arthur Biggs, the only participant in Britain's $7,000,000 Great Train Robbery who is still at large.

Biggs, 39, narrowly avoided capture Friday night in a police raid on his fashionable home in Blackburn, a Melbourne suburb, where the police found his wife Charmaine, 30, and sons Nicholas, 9, Christopher, 3, and Fairley, 2.

Police said they learned that Biggs, who escaped from London's Wandsorth jail in July, 1965, after starting a 30-year sentence for his part in the 1963 robbery, fled the house only nine hours before the raid.

Biggs's escape came less than a year after another of the train robbers, Charles Wilson, was sprung from a Birmingham jail. Wilson evaded capture by moving to Canada. He settled with his family in a luxurious home in Rigaud, Que. just west of Montreal.

He lived there until his recapture by police in January, 1968.

Police and the Royal Australian Air Force were checking movements of dozens of light aircraft in the search for Biggs. Charter companies were asked to provide information on all flights made in the last two days.

Police said Biggs apparently became anxious after his fellow workers at a jetport construction site near Melbourne pointed out how much he resembled a photograph of Biggs that Australian newspapers printed this week after reports that he was in the country.

RONALD ARTHUR BIGGS
. . . last escapee

Mrs. Biggs made a brief appearance in a Melbourne court today on charges of violating the Immigration Act. She was returned to Fairlea Women's Prison and is expected to appear again before the court on Monday.

The three boys are being cared for by welfare authorities.

Biggs and his family had been living in the Blackburn suburb for several months under the name of Terry Cooke. Authorities said he also was known as Terry Lamb at his construction job.

For the last three days, there have been rumors that police were closing in on Biggs, who also has been hunted in Europe and Canada. He made his daring 1965 break from the London jail with another prisoner, Eric Flowers. They scaled a wall with rope ladders thrown by accomplices and jumped into an awaiting furniture van.

Flowers had been serving a 12-year sentence for a crime not connected with the train robbery. He also is still at large.

A few hours before the police announcement of the raid, a former radio announcer, Max Phillips, told a news conference that he was the man who informed police about Biggs's presence in Australia.

Phillips said Biggs and Flowers arrived in Adelaide in 1966 and moved in mid-1967. He said they had their families with them for some time.

Phillips said he identified Biggs from a magazine picture.

Fifteen members of the Great Train Robbery gang are serving three- to 30-year sentences in British prisons. Less than $1,000,000 of the money has been recovered.

South Korea Lifts President's Limit

SEOUL (Reuters)—President Chung Hee Park of South Korea today won a landslide victory in a national referendum that will allow him to try to extend his rule until 1975.

Faced with the 52-year-old president's warning that he would resign immediately if defeated, voters throughout the country, apart from Seoul, overwhelmingly approved a constitutional amendment allowing presidents to seek a third term in office.

Park's governing Democratic Republican party had warned voters that chaos, a military takeover and an invasion from North Korea could result if Park was defeated. Voters apparently heeded the warnings.

Opponents of the government called the referendum fraudulent and said that the amendment is intended to perpetuate Park's rule indefinitely.

At noon today almost 90 per cent of the votes cast in Friday's balloting had been counted, and the official central election commission announced there were 5,972,341 in favor, 2,870,720 against and 330,304 ballots invalid.

With victory assured the soldier-turned-politician issued a statement calling for unity saying: "All should join in our column of advance toward new targets, whether they are in the government or opposition party, in or out of our government."

Park came to power in a military putsch in 1961, but dropped his general's rank to win a 1963 election as a civilian. He won again four years later, and under the present constitution would have had to relinquish the reins of office in 1971.

Korean Attack Kills Four U.S. Soldiers

SEOUL (AP) — Four United States soldiers were ambushed and killed by "an unprovoked attack" of North Koreans today near the Southern boundary of the demilitarized zone, a U.S. spokesman said.

The spokesman said the men were returning in a truck to their units after performing equipment maintenance at a guard post when they were attacked by hand grenades and small-arms fire.

Patrols began an immediate sweep of the area. The bodies were recovered from the truck.

Names of the dead were withheld until their relatives are notified.

Since January, one American has been killed and six wounded in a total of 60 incidents along the 18-mile-long American sector of the demilitarized zone.

It was the second incident since July 21, breaking a relatively long lull in North Korean attacks. A group of North Koreans attacked an American guard post at that time but were repelled.

Study Death Of Worker By Drowning

BURNS LAKE, B.C. (CP) — Police are investigating the drowning of a 49-year-old employee of Eurocan Pulp and Paper Ltd. whose body was found near a wharf at Ootsa Lake, 30 miles south of this north-central B.C. community.

Robert Russell Rathwell of Prince George was believed to have fallen from the wharf Thursday. An inquiry has been ordered.

MANITOBA CONSIDERS FAMILY PLANNING AID

WINNIPEG (CP)—The Manitoba government is considering entering the family planning field.

Health Minister Sidney Green said in an interview Friday his department is looking into the question of what role it might be able to play in family planning. A decision is expected in the near future.

He said that if any program was adopted, funds could be included in next year's budget. The program would be operated through existing provincial government health units and agencies.

"The idea would be that social workers at our various health agencies would counsel people on family planning and would also give guidance on the provision of contraceptive devices," Green said.

He said if such a program were adopted it would not mean any extra staff or new accommodation in existing agencies.

'Flop' Talk Dogs Soviet As Last Soyuz Comes Home

MOSCOW (Reuters) — Soyuz 8, last of the three Soviet Soyuz craft which orbited the earth together this week, was brought back to earth safely today.

The two Soyuz 8 spacemen, Col. Vladimir Shatalov and Dr. Alexei Yeliseyev, were reported fit and well after stepping down from their craft on to a snow-covered field in central Asia.

Soyuz 7, which carried a three-man crew, returned to earth Friday, and Soyuz 6, with two spacemen on board, came down Thursday. All three ships spent almost exactly five days in orbit around the earth.

The Soyuz 8 landing came amid speculation the latest Russian space spectacular had flopped.

The return of Soyuz 7 ended speculation it might link up with Soyuz 8 as the first step in creating a permanent manned orbiting space station.

The Russians never announced in advance the full program of their space shots, making it impossible to say whether complications arose to make a docking impossible. But most Moscw observers felt something more spectacular had been scheduled for the capsules than three days of group flight by the ships and an automatic space welding experiment carried out aboard Soyuz 6.

The nearest the three ships were officially reported to have come together came Wednesday when Soyuz 7 and 8 moved to within 500 yards of each other.

The aim of the triple flight was "to do the maximum possible to bring close the time when permanent orbital stations will be in operation," the government newspaper Izvestia said Friday night.

It was the first time a Russian newspaper described the ships' venture. But the comment was so vague it left observers wondering why it had not been issued earlier this week.

During the mission cosmonauts Georgy Shonin and Valery Kubasov aboard Soyuz 6 became the first space welders. A Soviet scientist said Friday the space welding experiment pushed forward the day when permanent orbiting space stations could be built.

Demons Flying High Check Pacific Coast

By PAT DUFOUR

It was a day for demons. We spent all day Thursday with them and came back unscathed—but impressed.

This is no pre-Halloween tale.

It is a story of the men who fly the big four-engined Argus aircraft that watch our seas along the west coast, probing as far as the Alaska Panhandle, the Arctic Basin and the length of Pacific Ocean from here to Hawaii.

They are the crews of the 407 Demons Squadron, based at Comox. They were dubbed Demons in the Second World War when they earned their laurels "masthead flying," swooping so low on enemy targets that often the underbellies of their planes came back bearing proof of the closeness.

Thursday's flight was arranged by the Canadian Armed Forces to show the work the six Comox-based crews do to defend Canada's rights and coastline.

It did.

The aging machines, due to be retired when a suitable replacement has been chosen, are not to be written off lightly. Neither are their 15-man crews.

There was affection in flight engineer Cliff Salter's voice as he described the craft as an "old clunker".

He added, "you pay when you go too modern. With our piston engines we have a far bigger range than a jet. We work with the Americans. Only last year we had a call from Hawaii. There was a sub in the middle of the Pacific. It was too far for their planes. We went, circled around the area five hours, and then flew on to Hawaii."

> 'They earned their laurels by buzzing the enemy's ships.'

The anti-submarine detection and destroying equipment aboard is so complicated it looks like an electrician's nightmare. One officer told me there's enough wiring in an Argus to stretch from Montreal to New York.

After a briefing and tour of the Comox base, we took off on a sea sweep in two crafts.

A highlight was sitting in the co-pilot's place as we swooped down on one of the three Russian draggers we spotted. There were no fish on deck—only the odd crew member craning to watch the low-flying convoy.

I rode for a while in the observer's spot in the plexiglass nose, feeling like a sky diver and hoping that the nose was as tough as it looked.

The flight was a training exercise. They went through the gyrations of detecting submarines, simulated an attack, and feathered one of the four engines. Fortunately for my blood pressure, the last exercise was a complete success!

Our skipper, Capt. Don Chapman, is an ex-fighter pilot. It was easy to guess this when, as an extra bonus, he took us through the Comox district mountains. We peered up at forbidding crags and sidled past the Comox Glacier. It looked, to uninitiated eyes, to be a mere stone's throw away.

But, if they played it dicey going through the mountains, it was all business when we were over the sea. Every contact on the radar, big or small, was checked out. It was reassuring to know that 2½ million miles of inshore waters and ocean receive this penetrating probing.

As we listened through our earphones, we felt a part of the armed forces' "eyes and ears."

Hot Pants Picketers

BAKERSFIELD, Calif. (UPI) — A dozen girls picketed North High School in defence of their right to wear pants. "Let us be warm—don't make us conform," their home-made signs said.

The girls complained that a new edict dictating dress styles overlooked the effect of the cold weather on bare legs. School authorities got the girls to change back into skirts, but they vowed to carry the protest to the country board of education.

Saanich's 2% Smashes 100% Civic Unity

By JIM HUME

Solidarity forever is a lesson trade unions learned a long time ago.

So effectively did they learn, that about four years ago Vancouver Island municipalities decided they'd better take a leaf from the union agreement negotiating book and join ranks when new bids for salary increases came up.

Hume

Secretly, yes that's the right word, municipal representatives organized a meeting at Parksville. They spent a day at Island Hall shaking hands and pledging undying loyalty to the cause of the taxpayer.

Much to their consternation they returned home to find that Ab Kent, then covering city hall for the Times, was not only privy to their secret, but actually had the audacity to write a story detailing their deliberations and decisions.

But that was four years ago.

SPLINTERED

As the years went by it soon became obvious that smaller municipalities could not negotiate with unions on the same basis as the larger urban areas. The ranks splintered slightly, but they didn't break.

Not until this week, anyway, when Mayor Hugh Curtis of Saanich pulled the kingpin out of the four core municipalities' togetherness and signed his two-per-cent morale boosting increase for his municipality's police force.

Labor has hailed his decision to break ranks as far-sighted and courageous.

Municipal management's opinion of his decision can't be printed in a family newspaper.

The far-reaching consequences of the Curtis decision cannot be forecast at this time, but one thing is sure: he's broken a fence it will be difficult to repair.

PRESIDENT, YET

And he has also, as president of the Union of British Columbia Municipalities, severely damaged a four-year effort by all municipal governments to introduce some form of reasonable and united effort to hold wage costs in line.

While still on the Saanich scene.

A couple of weeks ago Ald. Bill Campbell wondered out loud why key personnel were leaving Saanich for other fields.

The answer could lie in the advertisements seeking replacements for assessor and lands commissioner Jack Lindsay and multi-purpose man John Bericoff.

The municipality is seeking four men to replace the two leaving.

That could be a decision forced by rapid growth in the municipality.

Or it could be, Ald. Campbell, that for the past few years the work-load has been heavier than one man could bear. Maybe a survey of other work-loads carried by senior officials out there on Vernon Avenue would be in order.

Or maybe another two-per-cent morale-boosting raise could hold senior staffers on the job.

Black Scholars Win Equal Block

MONTREAL (CP) — Black militants who staged two days of angry confrontation with delegates to the African Studies Association conference in Montreal Friday won their point when the association voted that its board of directors should be composed equally of blacks and whites.

The governing fellows adopted a resolution that will ensure at least 50 per cent representation on the board for blacks and also established a 30-man committee, with equal representation for blacks and whites, to make a thorough investigation of the goals and organization of the association.

About 1,000 delegates, mainly American experts on African affairs, are attending the conference.

The association's Canadian counterpart, the Committee for African Studies in Canada, withdrew Friday after the interruptions but the Americans, many of them white scholars, stayed on.

Earlier Friday, the militants, calling themselves the Black Caucus, systematically interrupted and closed down panel discussions and film showings.

TOOK OVER PLATFORM

On Thursday, they took over the platform at general sessions and prevented scheduled events from continuing.

Caucus spokesmen accused the specialists of perpetuating neo-colonialism, intellectual arrogance and "distortion of our black civilization."

They demanded equal representation on the board of directors—previously nine with only two blacks. They also suggested the association denounce officials of Montreal's Sir George Williams University for their role in February's computer riot and provide funds for the defence of the accused who had become "political prisoners.

Delegates greeted the militants with mixed reactions of anger and support.

One white spokesman said that 50 per cent black representation could be interpreted as a racist measure but that for a long time blacks have been deceived and sold short when represented by whites.

MOUNTIES TRACK LOST HOUSE

GREEN LAKE, Sask. (CP) — The RCMP which traditionally always gets its man, now has a record of getting its house.

Two members of the local detachment could hardly believe it Thursday when a resident asked how one reports a stolen four-room house.

The asker had looked out of her window and noticed that her son's home had vanished.

The RCMP moved into action and discovered that a mover had a contract to take a house 20 miles to Rush Lake. They had taken the wrong house and were a mile out of town before Cpl. Craig Inkster told them what they had done.

Now the mover is in a fix—he has to figure out how to turn his truck around on a narrow gravel road.

Green Lake is 200 miles northwest of Saskatoon.

Audio-Visual Class Erupts

HILO, Hawaii (UPI) — Teacher June Amasaki and members of her sixth grade class built a miniature volcano, armed it with firecracker powder and set if off Friday to learn something about air pollution.

Instead, they got a painful lesson in the danger of handling explosives.

The blast rocked the Keaau elementary school and sent Mrs. Amasaki and eight children to a dispensary with minor injuries.

SOUNDING BOARD TALKS . . . . . . TO A VOCAL SPECIALIST

Walk! Don't Run With Voice!

Catherine Young With Son Ty

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Nothing about training the musician whose instrument is his voice can be rushed.

And Catherine Young has no hesitancy in saying that anyone who offers the tyro singer a short route to the concert stage is dealing in charlatanism.

"I insist that my students accomplish one step at a time," says the dark, vivacious wife of University of Victoria music division's new head, Phillip Young.

Mrs. Young, a highly trained professional singer, did not add teaching simply as a sideline to her concert activities.

One Step At a Time

"I have done everything I can toward achieving a major career in vocal teaching," she says.

Teaching and performing are her chief interests but she definitely abandoned any idea of extensive concertizing when Phillip Taylor Young III—Ty—arrived two years ago.

This doesn't mean that she intends to give up performing altogether. Her Victoria debut, scheduled for last summer's Victoria Fair series, was delayed by a throat ailment brought on by change of climate and atmosphere.

She is now working with pianist Winifred Scott on a program to be presented Nov. 19 in the new music division evening series.

Throat Ailment Cancels Debut

Her chief ambition is to become known as an excellent teacher and her career in that capacity in this city has already begun as a member of the voice department of the Conservatory of Music.

Vital and alert, the singer talks about musical possibilities and plans in the city she and her husband fell in love with at first sight.

And about the places and experiences her pursuit of the finest training brought her.

Mrs. Young's first advanced musical studies were undertaken at the famous Eastman School of Music of the University of Rochester, from which she gained several degrees, including her Master's degree in musical literature and voice.

Pursuit Of the Finest

She also taught at the Eastman School and was principal singer at the 125-year-old Bach Festival at Baldwin-Wallace College before going to England where she studied for a year. She then went to Zurich for two years of opera study under Herbert Graf.

At that time she was the only foreign student to be given a Swiss government grant.

During her two European years Mrs. Young sang a good deal of oratorio and broadcast recital performances throughout Germany, France and Switzerland.

Only Foreigner To Get a Grant

In spite of her operatic training her prime interest developed in oratorio and song literature.

"There is a great deal of oratorio sung in England and in Germany also, but in Italy, except for annual performances of the Verdi Requiem practically nothing of that nature is heard," she comments.

"The fact is that in continental Europe you must make your name as an opera singer before you can create any other sort of singing career."

At the end of her two years in Zurich, illness in the family called Catherine Young back to the United States and it was then that she made her decision to stay and concentrate on teaching.

"There is a tendency in the United States for colleges and music schools to hire well known over-age singers as teachers, chiefly for their name and reputation.

Concentrate On Teaching

"But these people, who quite often resent or chafe against their change in status and accept it as a necessary evil of aging, seldom make the best teachers."

In Europe, Mrs. Young says, the approach is entirely different. Teaching is a specialized art. "The people who pursue it take a great pride in it."

Of her own students she will demand that they master the technique of each stage before advancing to the next stage and that in the beginning as much time is put in thinking through their lessons as in vocalizing.

It may be a slow, painstaking route, says Mrs. Young, but it is the only way in which a promising student can hope to achieve the discipline and superb art of the really fine singer.

A Season to Remember Shaping for Symphony

With the second subscription pair of concerts this Sunday and Monday, Symphony 70 already looms as a season of records.

The biggest total audience in Victoria Symphony Society history appears assured as a result of the major advance in season subscribers—an audience which will attend the most impressive series of concerts yet scheduled.

This weekend Laszlo Gati has assembled an orchestra of 71 musicians — including two harps — to play a challenging program. Among the meaty and complex scores are Stravinsky's Firebird and Debussy's Nocturnes, Nuages et Fetes.

And for the first time not one musician has been brought from Vancouver specifically for the occasion.

That the Victoria Symphony, with its notable soloists, such as this program's world renowned pianist, Malcuzynski, and the international recital series, is attracting national interest is shown in the fact that CBC will record the Malcuzynski recital on Wednesday and that plans are being made for possible orchestral recording sessions later on.

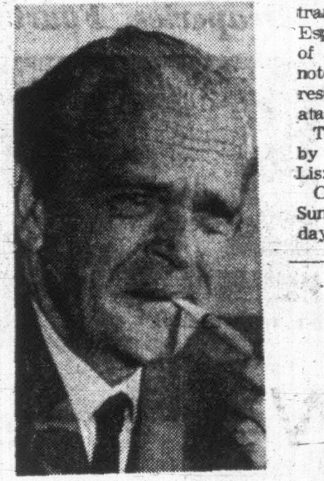
In keeping with an admirable policy — which is being encouraged throughout the country by Canada Council incidentally — Gati has included an interesting set of sketches for orchestra by the young French-Canadian composer, Francois Morel.

Entitled Esquisse, this is music that projects a shifting variety of moods without interruption.

At the Wednesday recital he will play Liszt's variations on a Bach theme, two of his Petrarca Sonnets and Rhapsodie Espagnole. Chopin's works, of which Malcuzynski is a noted interpreter, will be represented by the B minor Sonata, Mazurkas and Waltzes.

The concerto to be played by Malcuzynski is the great Liszt No. 2 in A major.

Concerts are at 3 p.m. on Sunday and 8:30 p.m., Monday, at the Royal Theatre.

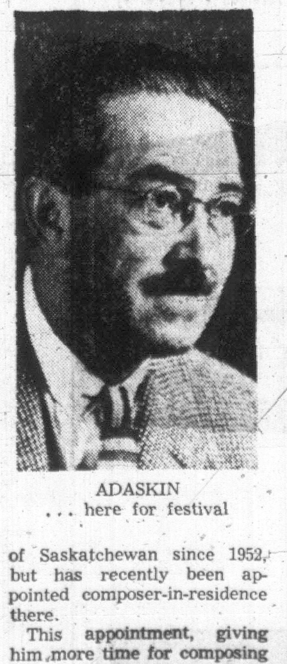


FAMED Polish pianist, Witold Malcuzynski, will follow his appearance with Victoria Symphony this weekend with a recital at McPherson Playhouse, Wednesday. His program is one to delight lovers of romantic music for it is all Liszt and Chopin, composers for whom he is particularly noted as an interpreter.

Noted Musician To Adjudicate

One of Canada's noted musicians, member of a distinguished musical family, will be on the panel of adjudicators for the Greater Victoria Music Festival next spring.

Professor Murray Adaskin has been head of the department of music at University of Saskatchewan since 1952, but has recently been appointed composer-in-residence there.



ADASKIN
. . . here for festival

This appointment, giving him more time for composing and conducting, is one of the first of its kind to be made by a Canadian university.

An accomplished violinist, Adaskin has composed approximately 50 major works which include a set of pieces for violin and piano for young performers.

His compositions have been performed and broadcast in the United States and all over Europe as well as Canada. Four of his works are available on Columbia, RCA Victor and Heritage labels.

In Victoria he will adjudicate orchestral and string classes and original compositions for which a new class has been added to the syllabus.

The official syllabus for the 1970 festival carries a striking design that draws attention to the fact that this festival will join the British Columbia Music Festival Association in celebrating the Beethoven bicentenary (1770-1970).

The syllabus is now available at Western Music, 1108 Blanshard Street; Hall and Fairfield Music Centre, 728 Fort, and Bernie Porter Music Studio, 1724 Douglas.

Special awards in junior and senior divisions are offered Victoria entrants who qualify for provincial finals to be held in Vancouver, May 30.

IMPROVE SERVICE

That the Victoria Music Festival keeps up with the times and is constantly seeking ways to improve its service to music in the community is illustrated by the 1970 innovations.

Among these are a number of non-competitive as well as competitive classes for schools.

The no-age-limit family ensemble class has been made non-competitive also in the hope that this will encourage participation by intimate, just-for-fun home musicians.

Last spring's class for pop groups emerges in the current syllabus as a class for folk rock, any combination of voice and instrument with not more than six performers. This, too, is non-competitive.

Last Film Pioneer Walks Off the Lot

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — An era ended recently when J. L. Warner walked out the door of Warner Brothers studio after severing his last connection with the company.

Here truly was the last pioneer, the final link between the film industry's founding and its troubled present.

A few of the founders are still alive, notably Adolph Zukor and Samuel Goldwyn. But Zukor, though alert at 96, has long relinquished decision-making. And Goldwyn, who recently turned 87, still operates his studio but hasn't made a film in a decade.

Although he had sold the studio to Seven Arts two years ago, Jack Warner continued on, keeping office hours and preparing a big western, The Frontiersman.

But when Kinney National Service bought out Seven Arts, the new management did not favor the project.

Warner, 77, ended his ties as independent producer and board member of the corporation.

Now he is completely on his own. He has indicated that he will remain active, both in films and his newfound interest, the stage. He is backing the new Broadway musical Jimmy, based on the life of onetime New York mayor James Walker.

HE WENT WEST

The four Warner brothers made their first film in 1912 and Jack was sent West to open their Hollywood studio in 1918.

He remained head man for almost 50 years, an unparalled record.

Although he refuses to discuss it, friends believe that his personal sorrow was that he could not keep the studio in family hands.

Warner has a son, Jack Jr., who worked at the studio. But 10 years ago father and son quarreled, and Jack Jr., was barred from the lot.

At one time Warner was grooming son-in-law William Orr as his successor, but that didn't work out.

Strangely, none of the founders of the major film companies handed down control of their studios to sons.

Darryl F. Zanuck has now given the presidency of 20th Century-Fox to his able son Richard, but the elder Zanuck cannot be considered an industry founder.

He worked as production boss for Warner, later merged his independent Twentieth Century company with Fox.

Everything About GBS Was on the Grand Scale

By ANN SADDLEMYER

His first literary performance was a private prayer "in three movements like a sonata and in the best Church of Ireland style," composed entirely "for the entertainment and propitiation of the Almighty;" his last was a puppet play for two characters, himself and Shakespeare.

Although he wrote more words in his lifetime than any other modern playwright, perhaps more than any other writer, Shaw has rarely fallen below the religious ambition of that first effort and the stylistic simplicity of the last.

Here Stanley Weintraub makes GBS tell his own story of the first forty years of that formidable personality.

We learn that as a boy he anticipated the famous operatic beard and satanic manner by decorating his bedroom with frescoes of Mephistopheles; that as an "incorrigible unemployable" (supported by his mother) he aspired to be a second Michaelangelo at the South Kensington School of Design; that as a lover he rated his letters better than Beethoven's.

His life style, like his plays and his sense of humor, was always on the grand scale. "Whether it be that I was born mad or a little too sane, my kingdom was not of this world: I was at home only in the realm of my imagination, and at my ease only with the mighty dead.

SHAW An Autobiography, 1856-1898, selected from his writing by Stanley Weintraub. Clarke Irwin. $12.50.

"Therefore I had to become an actor, and create for myself a fantastic personality fit and apt for dealing with men, and adaptable to the various parts I had to play as author, journalist, orator, politician, committee man, man of the world, and so forth."

Whether he was lecturing from a Fabian soapbox at Hyde Park Corner, inspecting drainage as a vestryman of the St. Pancras Borough Council, advertising the Impressionists as art critic of The World, advocating Wagner as music critic of The Star, interpreting Ibsen as drama critic of The Saturday Review, or chastely writing incendiary love letters to London's leading actresses, Shaw was conscientiously playing a part.

George Bernard Shaw, age 41

He performed those roles not only sincerely, but critically. One of the most impressive revelations of these autobiographical essays is the sheer hard work of the man.

Shaw's education was the Bible, the Arabian Nights, Dickens and Shakespeare, Beethoven, Mozart and Handel; his university "the musical society, the National Gallery, and Dalkey Hill."

He taught himself the agonies of public speaking by practising it at every opportunity, and learned to distinguish between romance and reality by becoming a critic by trade, and a member of "the republic of art" by profession.

"I am always electioneering," he admitted. "Never in my life have I penned an impartial criticism, and I hope I never may." He carried the same philosophy into his playwriting, "the most vivid and real of all ways of storytelling."

But he also brought with him his religious ambitions; the theatre became his church, the play his sermon on the distinction between the romance of the life we lead and the reality of the life we should aspire to. "To me the tragedy and comedy of life lie in the consequences, sometimes terrible, sometimes ludicrous, of our persistent attempts to found our institutions on the ideals suggested to our imaginations by our half-satisfied passions, instead of on a genuinely scientific natural history."

One senses this same directed passion in his attitude towards women. A constant virgin but incorrigible philanderer until he was twenty-nine, his friendships were rarely consummated, including the most lasting one, his marriage.

Of his innumerable epistolary affairs, the most revealing and honestly passionate is the long correspondence with Ellen Terry, but although they lived in the same area of London, they chose not to meet. And even here Shaw's letters frequently became lectures on the art of acting and the right way of life.

"Let those who may complain that it was all on paper remember that only on paper was humanity yet achieved glory, beauty, truth, knowledge, virtue, and abiding love," is his final comment about his friendship with the great actress.

In this selection by Mr. Weintraub we are introduced not only to Shaw's life and loves, but to many of the rival figures who claimed allegiance to that republic of art.

The economist Sidney Webb is acknowledged as his superior, as is the master craftsman William Morris. Oscar Wilde crossed the same stage, but although the two Irishmen maintained a casual friendship, Shaw was too gauche and democratic for the snobbish Oscar.

He complimented Henry Irving by constantly criticizing him ("when questions of art are concerned I am really malicious"); he terrified Swinburne by talking too much at lunch.

His honesty extended to his relationships with institutions. Of acting: "It took a European war to cure them of wanting to be ladies and gentlemen first and actresses and actors after." Of criticism: "Critics, like dentists, are a good deal occupied in hurting sensitive people in sensitive places."

Of censorship: "It is plain to silly people that all that need be done is to find a censor who combines all the wisdom, learning, and concern for human welfare of the Vatican, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the episcopates of all the Churches, with the omniscience of the Holy Trinity, and put fine art under his thumb."

Of the press: "In the press as in other departments the greatest freedom may be found where there is least talk about it."

But too much of even Bernard Shaw can cease to be a good thing. After 295 pages, one begins to wish Mr. Weintraub had been as ruthless as his subject. And while we are reminded that Shaw was repetitive, which is true, we are left with the impression that he was also a bore, which is false and unfair.

And, perhaps even more shocking for the tirelessly accurate Shaw, the editor has been more thorough in his researches than in his proof-reading.

Two Works of Poetry Show Divide Between Valuable and New Gimmickry

By DONALD STAINSBY

Releasing the arts from rigid rules and forms is on the whole a good thing—emotions are singularly inhospitable to formulas—but it leaves us in danger.

When forms are gone and freedom triumphs the way is wide open to the charlatans.

SO FAR, SO GOOD, Poems, 1938 - 1968, by Raymond Souster. Oberon Press. $4.

JOHN TORONTO, New Poems by Dr. Strachan, found by John Robert Colombo. Oberon Press. $3.75.

Gimmickry flourishes and fads proliferate.

Painting's gates are open to such abominations as some pop art and plastic bags and blank white canvasses. Unhappily, the gates of the poetic fortress are equally unlocked.

There is only one hope and that is to have a standard of comparison. Such a standard, a demonstration of relative values, is offered us—apparently unwittingly—by Oberon Press's two latest publications.

The Souster volume contains verse as untrammeled by convention, as free and individual, as any ever written. Yet here is poetry—sweet, quiet, embracing, sharp and vivid, in total almost a hymn to humanity.

Colombo's book is a piece of jigger-pokery if ever one was published. I blush for the publishers when in the dust-jacket blurb they refer to the "found poem" as "this most demanding of poetic forms."

The found poem—like the plastic bag of plastic art—is being put upon us in all seriousness and is likely to be received by some in all seriousness, when it ought to be laughed off the shelves.

It is committed by a poet or someone who would be a poet, going to the works of some great man and lifting from his writings sentences that are then written down in broken lines.

It is these broken fragments that are then to be accepted as poetry.

Colombo has turned to the writings of Bishop Strachan, the founder of Ontario's educational system, a leading member of the Family Compact of pre-Confederation Canada, or rather Toronto.

Now Strachan had a lot to say about a lot of things, almost none of it relevant to today. And apparently almost none of it of a poetical turn.

Try this:

My objects are principally two,
the promotion
of religion and education.

Those four lines are printed under the heading "My Objects," so we are presumably supposed to accept them as a poem.

We are offered another under the title "To W. D. Moodie of 'The Literary Garland,'" which begins like this:

We are
I fear too little as yet
in this new country to appreciate
as we ought . . .

One can only assume that those who are trying to pass this junk off as poetry consider that we are too little as yet advanced in this new country to appreciate literary merit as we ought.

And I for one would like to suggest that they are wrong in their assumptions. I dearly pray that I am not in this assumption of mine.

There may indeed be individuals whose statements and messages have insight and wit and some metrical aspect to them that makes them suitable for turning into "found poems". This collection only demonstrates that Bishop Strachan's have not.

Nevertheless, I do not condemn the volume entirely.

The introduction, a charming cameo of Bishop Strachan by William Kilbourn (in prose) is an excellent thing.

Perhaps I would not be so angry about being put upon by this volume if Souster's had not arrived at the same time to form such a contrast.

Though the publishers don't bother to number the pages, Souster's book seems to be about equally divided between uncollected poems and new poems. It would be rash to say that these are vintage Souster, but they are poetry.

The unmistakable sweetness of you
spills over me like wine.

Phrases that sing like that show why Souster, who won the Governor-General's Award for poetry in 1964, has so long been considered one of Canada's leading poets.

Or this, also from the earlier group:

The taste of their war in my mouth
choking unclean thing

There is a freedom, a discipline and an insight, a touch of soul about this man's writing that, to me, spells poetry.

And however wise or acid the comments of the long-gone Bishop Strachan may be to a historian, they just do not add up to poetry. I contend that it is false advertising to say that they do.

And so pointless, so long as there are poets with us of Souster's calibre.

We do not have to agree with his apparent plea to take the ice and steel and black of night out of poetry and let the sentimental in (though personally I do not object to that). But we must admire a man who can write such lines as these which appear in one of the new poems in this collection:

Get the poem outdoors under any pretext, reach through the open window
if you have to, kidnap it right off the poet's desk, then let it go, stranger
in a fresh green world...

With poets like that among us, who needs Bishop Strachan?

'We're Going to Win'

By BILL WALKER

It's easy to see now how New York Jets won last January's Super Bowl football game.

They were psyched into it by quarterback Joe Namath and punter Curley Johnson.

Namath you have heard about because of his heroics on the field with the Jets, and his association with a downtown gin mill in New York.

COUNTDOWN TO SUPER BOWL, by Dave Anderson. Random House. $8.50.

Johnson is the fellow who kept reminding the Jets during the days leading up to the playdown with Baltimore Colts that:

"Chicken ain't nothin' but a bird; and this ain't nothin' but another football game."

Of course, too, there was the widely publicized and now prophetic remark that Namath made in Miami just prior to the game:

"We're going to win, I'll guarantee you."

It sounded like so much hogwash at the time, because the Colts, champions of the National Football League, had an overall season's record of 15 and 1, had walloped Cleveland Browns in the league playoff, and were generally regarded as having the best defence in football.

The Jets, on the other hand, were 12 and 3 for the year, had barely squeaked by Oakland in their league playoff, and were considered by many fortunate to be in Miami.

The tale of determination and self-confidence that resulted in the now famous 16-7 victory for the Jets is told in this fine book for football lovers everywhere.

Dave Anderson, a New York sportswriter assigned to cover the Jets all season, takes you into the dressing room, on the practice field, to poolside, reveals the game strategy, and how it developed, the moods and thoughts of the players, and how they lived those final anxious days.

Namath has to be the key figure of the piece, and is.

Away from the field, Namath lived his other part, swirling his Scotch in his glass, but always the dominant theme was:

"We will win, I said it, and I meant it."

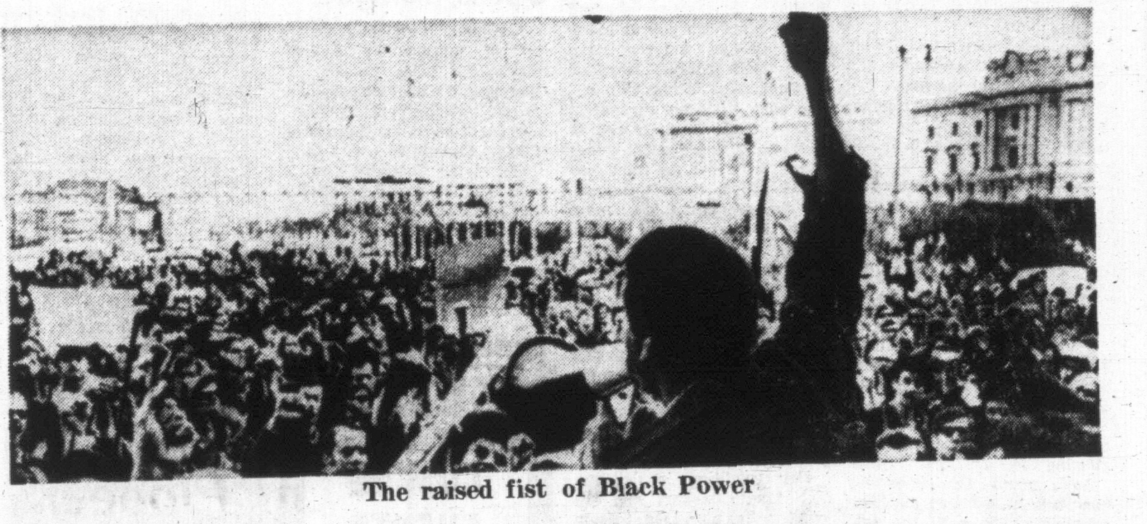
This time he has invaded The Yukon and the Northwest territories by car and air. This is, apparently, a fair and accurate account of his dusty journeys.

THE YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES, by Edward McCourt. Macmillan. $6.95.

In his neatly written account there is nothing very new. He has discovered and retold some of the legends of the North.

The author opens chapter 8 with a quotation from a few lines of Robert Service's The Law of the Yukon. "Thus," writes explorer McCourt, "Robert Service in one of his more obvious imitations—Kipling and syntactically confused ebullitions." Later in the chapter the author finds some puzzlement about the popularity of Service.

Well, we venture to tell Mr. McCourt, the way to take Service is after a couple of jolts of rum, the way it was taken in the First World War by thousands of Canadian, British and American troops. He may not have been a poet but he gave us our song of our north.



The raised fist of Black Power

Girding for War in Ghettos

By STEVE HUME

Deep in the labyrinths of the inner city the blacks are arming.

They have had enough. They have suffered long enough, and waited long enough for some surcease from sorrow. And now the blacks' answer to the whiteman's endless and inarguable stupidity is violence.

The black veterans filter back from the jungles of Vietnam. They have been front-line cannon-fodder. They are versed in the shadow-games of killing from dark corners in the dead of night. They are choreographers of ambush, dancers in the hit-and-run ballet of guerrilla war. They are coming home to a steaming slum, exploited people, the tragedy of children with no place to go.

THE URBAN GUERRILLA, by Martin Oppenheimer. Quadrangle Books. $5.50.

Quietly, the arsenals of sawed-off shotguns, automatic weapons, Molotov cocktails, zip-guns, Bowie knives, bayonets grow in basements, under beds and bathtubs; in closets beneath the second-rate clothes.

It is, after all, every American's inalienable right to arm himself with personal weapons.

And on a hot Friday night an ignorant cop, who could have had a simple course in basic social relations for a few dollars more, busts a black teenager and pow!—race war.

To the whites, a race war. To the blacks "jihad," a holy war for their humanity.

With so many veterans of a vicious war and so many weapons available it is a possibility now, today, tomorrow; it was a possibility a year ago says Martin Oppenheimer in The Urban Guerrilla.

Oppenheimer has the expertise to judge. He is a sociologist, his specialty the field of social change.

His book explores possible avenues black power advocates may take, from the isolated ghetto revolt, to coordinated revolution, to chronic terrorist attacks and sabotage patterned after the Maccabees of Palestine.

They are frighening alternatives, for widespread violence would almost certainly have major economic and social repercussions in Canada and Mexico.

The tactical improvements developed in the last several years make earlier army and police manuals on riot and mob control look as relevant as Orville Wright's first airplane, says Oppenheimer.

"And the sheer economic weight of such repressive measures to urban governments and to society in general is fantastic and clearly out of proportion to its alleged benefits," the sociologist states emphatically.

He estimates the size of the "law-enforcement" market at about $2.5 billion per year. It is, ironically, more than the 1968 federal budgetary appropriation to the Office of Economic Opportunity. He estimates another $1.2 billion is tied up in protective service companies like Pinkerton's, which are only partially devoted to anti-riot or related activities.

In short, the two nations of the United States are picking up an alarming head of steam on the railroad to civil war.

"Blacks are arming, the police are arming, and the ultra-right is arming." Oppenheimer quotes Robert F. Williams from the Crisis of the Negro Intellectual:

"All over the U.S. the John Birchers, the Minutemen, the State Righters, the Nazis and the Ku Klux Klan are arming and training for total warfare against our people . . . The Afroamerican hasn't got a chance in the U.S. unless he organizes to defend himself."

He counters with a quote from the police chief of Tampa, Florida:

"We have taken off the kid gloves with these elements who cause riots."

Detroit whites: "Will you be forced to stand helplessly by because you were unprepared to defend your home or neighborhood against bands of armed terrorists who will murder men and rape women?"

"The answer is law and order, not weak-kneed sociology," says a district attorney seeking the Republican nomination for Congress.

It is a chilling picture of polarization.

And the outlook is bleak.

Oppenheimer, true to the flag of his sociology, offers no panacea of easy political, economic or social solutions to the problem.

He avoids pessimism only in his objectivity.

He points out that a black revolution would fail. Isolated military uprisings would be snuffed out. Chronic terrorism would bring about downfall of democratic government and establishment of ruthlessly authoritarian regime, a major step backward.

The only hope, he says, lies in a revolution of the mind. Peaceful resistance and hope. Armed rebellion would be more satisfying in immediate gratification, but it would result in a bloodbath of giant proportions.

Anyone Can Lose In the Money Game

By AL FORREST

The stock market is a form of gambling, says Adam Smith in this paperback edition of his best-seller.

And like all gambling, it's fun to win but losing's not so bad either as long as you have a good run for your money.

People invest in stocks for fun, not profit, says Smith. And that is why they keep coming back even if they suffer large losses.

THE MONEY GAME, by Adam Smith. Dell paperback. $1.25.

Adam Smith is the pseudonym of a writer who says his identity must be protected because he's pretty big on Wall Street.

He's certainly a big reader, because there's hardly a How-To-Make-A-Million book he hasn't read.

He spends most of his book ridiculing rival Wall Street authors and pointing out the folly of trying to get rich by using computers, charts or 'inside tips.'

All these theories make him double up with laughter and he creates the impression he's almost in tears from belly laughs as he describes the hours investors spend trying to find some formula for stock fluctuations.

Stocks, says Smith, are unpredictable. Nobody knows for sure whether a stock is going up or down. The professionals make fewer mistakes but they do make mistakes.

The Money Game is great reading but in the end frustrating.

For Smith has no answers for beating the stock market game either. All he says is be wary when you play it.

You don't have to be a Wall Street expert to be aware of that. One or two forays into the market will do it.

The New Message Is Sheer Delight

By HOLLIE WEST
The Washington Post

The artistry of gospel singers is as unknown to most people as the intricacies of quantum mechanics or the theories of Hegelian philosophy.

Gospel singers may be more easily understood—or rather felt—than mathematics or Hegel, but they drift in limbo because of a lack of proper presentation.

When they are not depicted as musical primitives, they are categorized as exponents of a charming but limited form. They make discs for record companies with limited budgets, perform mostly in churches and receive only as much promotion as it takes to attract a handful of people.

HARD PRESSED

For most people, Mahalia Jackson is the personification of gospel music. After her, tough, The constantly watched and polled "man in the street" would be hard pressed to name a gospel artist.

This is a sad state of affairs for a music that has so much to say in terms of art and sociology.

Times are changing, however, for Marion Williams, one of the most remarkable gospel singers of all time. She signed a contract with Atlantic Records in early 1968 following several years of unwise direction from several other record companies.

She recorded a disc that was released recently. The company is promoting it and Miss Williams says things are getting better.

The album, entitled "The New Message" (Atlantic SD 8228), is a new approach for the singer. Since beginning her career in 1945 in her native Miami, the 42-year-old Miss Williams has been associated with the purest gospel music. But, on this disc, she performs two Bob Dylan songs and a tune by a member of the Rascals.

The Dylan pieces, "I Shall Be Released" and "I Pity The Poor Immigrant" are sheer delights. They are contemporary folk songs and Miss Williams delivers them with great power. She adds playful calypso phrasing to "Released" and gives "Immigrant" an exquisite lyrical treatment.

"People Got To Be Free," a tune by Felix Cavallere of the Rascals, is less successful despite her jaunty swing because its substance is not as rich as the Dylan material.

The thinking behind Miss Williams doing such songs is to present her to a wider audience, particularly the young who are buying the most records and attending numerous concerts.

Nesuhi Ertegun, president of Atlantic Records, says he hopes she will continue in this direction.

Miss Williams agrees. "I like folk numbers," she said in a recent interview. "People don't realize that when I was with the Ward Singers (1947 to 1958) that we sang many folk numbers. And Bob Dylan is such a great song writer. If a song has a message, and if I like the lyrics, I'll do it. I'm looking for songs that will be more commercial, but I will not erase my gospel image."

HAS OFFERS

Miss Williams says she has had offers to go pop as many other gospel singers have done with great financial success. "But I won't do it," she said. "It's not my salvation. I don't think money is everything. I see great things ahead, but I will not think less of God if it doesn't happen. He knows best. The main thing is that I want to live again. If I don't make it big in gospel, I'll be satisfied. I have my faith, my belief, my Jesus—call it what you will."

The gospel songs in her new album are full of strength of a mighty faith. She is no mere performer when she sings "How I Got Over." She is testifying to her life's purpose.

Her rendition is dazzling. The tempo is fast and she continually builds tension, constructing complex rhythmic figures and subtle melodic variations, until she sings a high, moaning "ooh" for several moments over a steady beat.

She is just as moving in her performance of "The Great Speckled Bird," a song of faith used to begin healing services at white revivals. It is a plaintive country gospel song and Miss Williams is superb in her quiet and dramatic interpretation.

'Let the Script Be Damned!' It Was

NEW YORK (AP) — The key to Indians, a tom-tom fantasy that opened this week at Broadway's Atkinson Theatre, comes in a speech by its maybe-hero, Buffalo Bill.

"Get set for anything!" he whoops during one especially frenetic bit of play-within-play uproar. "Let the script be damned!"

There's much more, in other words, to accept as emotional spectacular rather than as coherent drama in this piece by Arthur Kopit about the white man's treatment of the tribes that roamed the Western plains.

Kopit won much attention a half dozen years ago with that long-titled play since commonly abbreviated as Oh Dad, Poor Dad, a ridiculous comment on super-maternity.

The new play lacks any precise attitude, equating primitive naivete with colonizing avarice as equally responsible for what happened.

As a display of sheer, sinewy theatricality and circus rampage, however, Indians has a lot to keep you awake between the trite truisms of dialogue.

Electronic light effects with music to match, multi-loudspeaker throbbing all around the auditorium, a rakishly gimmicked setting and slow motion dance numbers are just some of the devices. Most of all there is Stacy Keach.

As Buffalo Bill, Keach gives a superbly arresting performance of marathon dimension. All of the chieftains who appear and fade, the barroom episodes and the hearings of a presidential committee supposedly investigating injustices—everything pivots about Keach and his amazing conviction.

Bit of Fantasy Opens Tonight

A comedy highlighted with a bit of fantasy by British playwright Giles Cooper, is Victoria Theatre Guild's second offering of the season, opening tonight at Langham Court. Curtain time is 8:15.

Out of the Crocodile with a cast that is headed by Sheila Litt and John Drean, will run nightly through next week, ending Oct. 25. Monday is two-for-one night at the box office.

Director of the comedy is Bert Farr.

Sound Waves of Color

By GORDON RICE

The two largest halls in the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria are now dark. One steps into darkness of the main hall and finds the paintings are all gone.

A series of softly glowing plastic boxes lie on the floor, in a bed of sand, lighting up and darkening at irregular intervals. The pearly surfaces of these boxes turn green, then pink, then fade to a faint purple afterglow. Tiny moving dots of colored lights play across the surfaces, tiny lights are cast from somewhere inside the boxes.

These are "Knox Boxes", and their inventor, David Knox, is a member of the Vancouver art group, Intermedia. The soothing and magical effect of this piece of kinetic sculpture is really the Electronic Age's equivalent of something like the old color fountains (Victoria's Butchart Gardens has one of the best of those).

When one discovers that Knox's Boxes can be built and maintained, however, for only a fraction of the cost of a color fountain, one wonders why they haven't been installed everywhere. Someday, certainly, boxes like this will be installed on lamp posts in Victoria, and they will be our night-time equivalent of flowers.

In the centre of the hall, a very large glass box, built by Greg Birdsall, will remain dark until one makes a sound. If your sound is merely an embarrassed cough, there will be only a timid flicker of light. But a vigorous tap dance, or even hearty applause, will bring this sound-sensitive box alive with brilliantly colored lights.

Continuous sound activates a rotating disc inside this electronic jewel, and waves of color actually flow across its surface. As you walk around the box, you notice each side is built of a different kind of light-refracting glass, permitting different sorts of light effects.

Subdued, but really exquisite, is Gregg Simpson's "Pyramid". An amber form, again glowing from the inside, sits inside a box of black mirrors. The ambered surfaces remind one of something ancient, or perhaps outside of time. As one approaches the darkly-glowing monument the image of the pyramid begins to repeat itself. By standing next to it, one sees the pyramid repeated, growing dim and distant, off into infinity

Looking At Art

Each single atomic particle implies the existence of all the others, and they all condition each other, however remote their distances.

"One particle of dust is raised and the great earth lies therein; one flower blooms and the universe rises with it," runs and old Chinese saying. Yet these thoughts hardly convey the feelings evoked by the pyramid box.

The sense of mystery and beauty raised by this work is not diminished by the adjacent "Landscape" by David Rimmer.

A framed piece of glass hangs on the dark wall, neither picture nor window, but in it one sees a mountain landscape. The landscape is sunny and blue but in a few minutes grows dark with sunset, blacks out, and then returns as dawn, repeating a continuous unbroken cycle.

This is time-lapse photography, by means of which is often shown the growth of plants. The film is projected from the other side of the glass, behind a partition.

Dennis Vance's "Wave" is a series of chrome tubes projecting in varying curves out from a partition. By stroking, squeezing, or tapping two of these tubes at a time, the Wave responds with a Plutonian melody.

Once one finds out how to play the instrument, one is reluctant to leave, or relinquish one's place to anyone awaiting a turn. The sounds are definitely tonic, invigorating.

Hopefully the "Electronic Seascape" created by Audrey Doray and Bob Mills will be fully activated soon. It failed to emit its ferocious sounds at the opening, but then people only go to openings to see their friends anyway.

Approached in the right spirit, this intricate and beautifully painted construction picks up one's presence by sonar impulses, then lights up, roars, and inside a rotation is set up. Solid plastic tubes project one's eyeballs on stalks into the machine, where they observe the flow of endless waves.

Phil Harrison, Gary Lee-Nova, Vincent Trasov, Glenn Lewis, and others who must go uncredited here have contributed pieces, projects, and energy to this marvelous show, which continues through November 9. The walls of the Gallery will absorb their vibrations and aquire a new vitality.

DRUM YOUR WAY TO DOROTHY

Following the appearance of an article last Saturday on the Peninsula Concert Orchestra, Dorothy Evans, new conductor of the group, was besieged by phone calls from musicians offering their services.

As a result, the orchestea has now filled in all the missing places with the exception of percussion.

Will anybody who has ever drummed their way in and out of a band or orchestra, who still owns a drum and would like to get back on the beat, join the callers on 658-5278.

Mrs. Evans says she doesn't mind how often her phone rings so long as there's an eager musician on the other end.

You Don't Know the Language . . . . . . If You Haven't Seen the Movie

By NICHOLAS VON HOFFMAN
The Washington Post

Movies are events in our lives. They provide a plane of unifying experience that nothing else does in the same way. "The Graduate" is an event more shared and reciprocated than many personal things that happen to us.

It doesn't matter if it's a good picture or if it's art; you must see it. If you haven't seen it you'll have trouble catching the nuances of what people say or make yourself understood. For the educated, this was once true of Shakespeare, Milton, the books called The Classics. It isn't so anymore. Now it's nice to know Shakespeare, but you don't have to quote him or recognize him to get along with other people.

There is no standard set of books which will do that. They've been replaced by movies. There is a difference, however. Soon it won't be necessary to have seen "The Graduate." Another movie will have taken its place. The indispensable cultural material of our time is quickly disposable.

"Bonnie and Clyde" is another one of these temporary classics. Some of these evanescent classics are pure romances. "Bullitt" is a specimen of that. To get a deeper meaning out of "Bullitt" you've got to torture its violent lyricism to infer what's not there. The same is only slightly less true of Dustin Hoffman's new movie "Midnight Cowboy."

Other movies, however, are not only cultural but social events. "Monterey Pop" is a good example. This picture transforms something that was close to a private, rock musicale into a wide happening.

Maybe the upcoming Woodstock movie will do the same when it appears. "Medium Cool" achieves the status of a social event through its use of the Chicago convention, that episode in our history which hangs in front of us like spots before the eyes.

The Monterey movie's function has been to amplify and pass on what happened in a way that is as close as possible to what the people who were there heard and saw and felt.

"Medium Cool" doesn't do that. The convention needs no amplifying; nor does the movie try to convey what being there was like.

Instead, it's addressed to people who didn't come then and wouldn't come now. It's made for medium cool people who feel the pull of events but only weakly, who sense violence and idiocy, but not strongly.

Although there's much overlapping thematic material, "Medium Cool" isn't like "If . . ." In "If . . ." the movie ends with the boys in the boarding school armed with rifles and mortars. They're acting out the fantasy of the impotent in the Guevara-Godard style.

"They shoot down the principal, the teachers, a visiting general, politicians, minister of religion, high-minded ladies of middle years, all those connected with enforcing inexplicable and immutable rules held in operation by dumb social inheritance."

"Easy Rider" is a mite closer to "Medium Cool." There's more about it that suggests the common, present situation. It could be one of us instead of Peter Fonda, or so it seems; actually the film is an adventuresome fantasy which is hard to identify with if you don't listen to the music.

The music is so good and the photography is so tricky that they gloss over easy recognition that the wandering heroes on their miraculous motorcycles push dope, and not grass either, but hard, white, powdery junk.

The acting, especially Jack Nicholson as the wacked-out, juicy-headed lawyer, covers up the teeny-bopper social criticism of the dialogue and slows up our seeing the film's many cheap shots.

The cheapest of which comes in the end when, once more, for the two hundredth time, those same old, southern, red-necked bigots—the guys who've been lynching black and liberal heroes through innumerable movies—brainlessly gun down both easy riders.

These narrow-minded, insensate brutes have done it again; they've killed a couple of nice boys because they have long hair and smoke a little dope.

But that's malarky; the really dangerous people in this country don't drive around in pick-up trucks; they wear business suits and they talk with Manhattan accents.

Closer, though not so close as "Medium Cool" to the cloudy moment of present time, is Emile de Antonio's new film, "In The Year of The Pig."

It's not about cops but is a recapitulation of the event we call Vietnam, a generation of old news reel clips and interviews put together for us to agonize over and be depressed about. Through the movie, we come together and have the purposelessness of the war stated for us.

In it there is the son of a general, a second generation tank man, Colonel George S. Patton III, saying against a warscape: "I was at a memorial service for four men in the second squadron who were killed the other day and the place was just packed. We sang three hymns and had a nice prayer. I turned and looked at the faces. I was just proud. My feeling for America just soared because of the way they looked; they looked determined and reverent at the same time, but still they're a bloody good bunch of killers."

We see him and we hear him and it sets us off in an ironic, chuckling, head-shaking emotion, the common experience of those who've reviled this war in helpless disgust for so many years.

MELODIE JOHNSON . . . part of the language

But De Antonio's movie has too much of the legal argument about it. It's too much of an exposition to be more than a peripheral social event.

It doesn't come to the centre of our dilemmas; "Medium Cool" does. "Medium Cool" is vague and off-centre and without plot and cold as television. Like us who watch television.

It talks to us who look at the tube and see poverty and war and demonstrations and who know there's a connection between those images and ourselves.

We're not certain what the connections may be, and if it's what we suspect it is, we're afraid. We might get involved.

The movie's major male figure is John, the TV cameraman, he if the cool medium who becomes medium Vooluknh's A cameraman, a cool instrument is the camera, and one that separates its user from people.

It gives its user a social role that keeps him from having to choose sides. John is at the convention taking pictures of it, but he is not of it. He is outside of it like the viewers, and as long as he keeps his camera and keeps his cool he can keep his life.

He can't stay cool, however. Everything around him is too hot. He takes his girl to the roller derby. They kiss while they watch the lesbians knock the bejabbers out of each other. That's cool. Except his girl isn't afterward. She lies on the bed and asks, "Why don't you admit it? You're a bastard. You're a rotten, egotistical, cameraman."

But John's changing, not using his camera merely to stave off the environment; he's growing warmer, stepping out of neutrality to shoot pictures that the TV station doesn't want.

He's getting so hot he gets fired. He doesn't know how come. "Why they canned me? I'm not sure I know the answer. People rarely say the real reasons for things. Big corporations never . . . just politics, bureaucratic politics," he says, having not turned medium cool, but that's too hot and too bothered.

Uncooly and unprofessionally, John dies in an automobile accident looking for a lost child.

The end isn't emotional. You're not shocked or weepy, but its very sogginess speaks to our preoccupations. It makes the movies all the more our current common subject matter . . . for new marches and manifestations are forming, but there is with them always the possibility of inappropriate death and anonymous social decapitation, always the fear that any move away from the two, that even medium cool, will be too much.

WEEK ON MARKETS

Best News in Months

By NICK FERRIS
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Canadian stock markets posted their best advances in the last 3½ months this week and about wiped out their losses of the last three weeks.

Previous to the three-week slump, markets had been inching ahead for about two months in an attempt to recover from a sharp drop in June and July.

Markets were closed Monday for Thanksgiving.

The sharp upswing this week appeared to be in response to a similar move on Wall Street.

New York markets rose sharply Monday and Tuesday on reports that the Nixon administration thought its battle against inflation was taking a good turn.

Caught up in the railwind from New York, Canadian markets posted one of their best daily gains of the year Tuesday.

And as expected, profit taking followed Wednesday as markets fought to hang on to slim gains.

Most observers expected profits trimmed. They said profit taking after a sharp upturn is more apparent when markets are recovering from severe slumps.

They also said markets held up well considering that some investors were waiting for the best opportunity to unload their holdings in the event of further market weakness.

But Thursday, when New York took off again, this time on news that the Viet Cong were willing to enter into secret peace talks with the United States, Canadian markets shot up, reversing early weakness of that day.

However, when the U.S. rejected the peace feeler unless Saigon was included in the talks, the gains were cut by almost half.

The line of weakness continued through Friday as markets marked time and New York drifted lower.

Generally, investors seemed unsure of the rally this week. While trading volume picked up slightly over last week's, it remained light.

LOSSES FOLLOW RALLIES

The fact that strong rallies in the last 4½ months usually have been followed by further losses could have had a depressing effect on investor confidence.

Another possible reason for the caution may have been predictions by some observers that markets could suffer another major setback before the year ends.

But any encouraging news, such as that of this week, could alter those predictions.

Statistically, on the Toronto Stock Exchange, industrials rose 4.79 to 180.15, base metals 3.74 to 111.03 and western oils 3.28 to 200.37. Golds lost 5.78 to 169.01. Volume was 9,314,000 shares compared with 10,032,000 last week. Gains outnumbered losses 502 to 254.

On the Montreal and Canadian exchanges, the composite index was off .38 to 175.53. Combined volume was 2,873,000 shares compared with 3,655,000 last week. Gains outnumbered losses 186 to 138.

Takeover Supported

TORONTO (CP) — Directors of Union Gas Co. Ltd. of Chatham, Ont., agreed Friday to recommend that shareholders accept a revised takeover offer by Consumers' Gas Co. of Toronto.

Union earlier had rejected an initial offer for 67 per cent control, but said it would recommend acceptance if the offer was extended to all Union shares.

Consumers' extended the offer to cover all shares, but reduced the cash part of the offer by $1, to $3.

For each Union common share, Consumers' Gas will offer one $14 par value 6½ per cent cumulative convertible preferred share of Consumers', half of one warrant and $3 in cash.

F. R. Palin, Union president, said the directors voted for acceptance despite being "frankly skeptical" of some reported operational savings accruing from the proposed merger.

Acceptance by shareholders would end the independent operation of Union Gas, formed in 1911, but Mr. Palin said it would not lead immediately to the disappearance of the company's name or business character.

$9.5M Pipeline For Coal Eyed

VANCOUVER (CP)—George W. Wilkinson, acting president of Copper Ridge Mines Ltd., said Friday his company is studying a proposal for a $9,500,000 pipeline that would transport coal from deposits near Smithers, B.C., 77 miles to deepsea freighters at the Kitimat, B.C., harbor.

Mr. Wilkinson said the coal would be transported in slurried form—that is, ground and mixed with water—in the pipeline. Elevation at the site of the coal deposits is 2,700 feet and drops to 50 feet at Kitimat.

He said a final decision would depend on Japanese steel interests, who have had engineers investigating the deposits.

He estimated cost of transport to tidewater by pipeline at 87 cents a ton.

The coal deposits are situated about 11 miles due west of Smithers in north-central British Columbia and were first mined in 1911. They are owned by Western Coal and Coke, Ltd., a subsidiary of Copper Ridge.

Mr. Wilkinson said the pipeline project had been worked out by "a recognized pipeline engineering company which prefers at this stage not to be named."

Smithers is about 415 miles northwest of Vancouver.

Court Upholds Dolly Varden Damage Award

OTTAWA (CP) — The Supreme Court of Canada has upheld lower court rulings ordering a large United States iming company to pay damages of $397,027 to Dolly Varden Mines Ltd. of British Columbia.

Sunshine Mining Co. of Idaho and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Sunshine Exploration Co. of Alberta, were found to be in breach of a 1964 contract they signed with Dolly Varden.

Under the contract, the Sunshine companies agreed to develop silver properties owned by Dolly Varden in the Kitsault River Valley of B.C.

At trial, the judge found Sunshine to be in breach of the contract and awarded Dolly Varden $314,051. In the B.C. Court of Appeal, Sunshine's appeal against the finding was rejected and the appeal court allowed an appeal by Dolly Varden increasing the damage award to $397,027.

In the Supreme Court of Canada hearing in February, the Sunshine companies admitted the breach of contract but appealed the amount of the damages.

Mr. Justice Ronald Martland, writing the unanimous judgment for the high court, said: "The submissions made on behalf of Sunshine in this court have failed to persuade me that, in the circumstances of the case, the courts below were in error in awarding to Dolly Varden damages equivalent to the expense involved in performing the work which Sunshine contracted to perform and deliberately failed to carry out."

SHARP DROP IN AIR FARE

LONDON (Reuters) — The lowest roundtrip fare yet on scheduled transatlantic flight —£58 ($151) — was announced here by the British Overseas Airways Corporation.

The latest in a series of price-cutting moves by major airlines, the new fare slashes £44 ($114) off the lowest now available for the return trip.

The fare will be available Nov. 8, subject to government approval, to groups of 130 or more.

Tug Firm Bought

The Honolulu-based Dillingham Corp. has agreed in principle to acquire outstanding stock of Vancouver Tug Boat Co. Ltd. for its subsidiary, Dillingham Corp. Canada Ltd. In a joint announcement the two companies said the deal involved a share exchange valued at about $15,000,000. A Vancouver Tug spokesman said no management or staff changes are contemplated.

Wheat Era Over, Farm Men Told

REGINA (CP) — The president of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange said Friday that Canada's wheat era is over and the days of unlimited production are gone.

J. E. McWilliams told a meeting of agricultural experts Canada's marketing effort must operate to obtain a share of world trade, but be able to adapt to rapidly changing conditions throughout the world.

McWilliams told members of the Saskatchewan Institute of Agrologists that Canada will remain a dominant factor in future world wheat markets but to share the markets Canada must have some form of incentive to encourage adjustments as needed in farming.

Canada should benefit from mistakes and programs in the United States.

He said there must be a continual striving to increase the purchasing power of the emerging nations because as their affluence grows the market for agricultural products will increase.

MARKETS THERE

If countries like India and Indonesia could increase their per capita consumption of meat only slightly, there would be an additional market for millions of tons of meat or its equivalent in feed grains.

McWilliams said that Canada, through its political judgment, has not developed a truly Canadian marketing arm "that fully represents our complex interests in selling grain, developing grain markets, analyzing potentials for meat and meat products — and all the diverse outputs of our fields, forests and streams."

He told a news conference later that Canada's agricultural policies are evolved to deal with crises as they arise. Once the crisis is past, the policy dies.

LONG RANGE PLAN

Canada had no long-range agricultural policy. All the talent available in the agricultural industry, from producers to bankers to politicians, would be needed. He told the agrologists that Canada's present marketing structure weighs against developing strong, independent, private Corporations of Canadian citizens to market grain.

Government monopolistic agencies appear to have some short-falls in this area, "particularly evident when the mix of our product becomes highly complex."

McWilliams said that in many respect, Canada's present sales policy is somewhat similar to many of its political policies — they are formulated to deal with the problems of the moment.

Street Reacts To Protest

By PHILIP GREER

NEW YORK (WP) — There were no black armbands or blue buttons visible on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange during the Vietnam moratorium on Wednesday and judging by the trading volume, business seemed to go on as usual.

But make no mistake; the brokers knew what was going on right outside their door and around the country and, in their own classical capitalist way, they were responding to it.

FAR-FETCHED

The reasoning may sound a little far-fetched, but it results from conversations with several brokers and mutual fund portfolio managers among the many who are still trying to figure out just what made the stock market take off like a shot.

Throughout the street's dismal summer, two factors were weighing on the market more than any others. One was the uncertainty about the ultimate depth and duration of the government-enforced business slowdown.

Until there was some idea of how far the cooling-off would go and how long it would last, there was no way to make projections about the revival. Since the summer went by with no real indications that the slowdown had begun, the experts couldn't gauge its magnitude.

The first hand-news indication that the slowdown had begun came with the report, earlier this month, that the number of unemployed jumped by half a percentage point in September.

JOBLESS

Even that news is not conclusive but, of all the different kinds of statistics, a big jump in joblessness carries with it a sense of urgency that started the street thinking that the time for a letup in deflationary pressures is at least within sight

The second problem—and in a large sense a more important factor than the bread-and-butter issues of money—was and is the Vietnam war.

As the street showed on Thursday, peace has become extremely bullish in the street. In a series of contradictory announcements, the traders thought that private talks had been arranged in Paris and the Dow Jones average rocked some 12 points in less than an hour.

When it developed that the talks were not set, the market started moving just as fast in the opposite direction and only the closing bell enabled the Dow to post a big gain on the day.

DEPRESSING

The built-in hypo of the Vietnam war is plainly negating much of the effort to cool off the economy. But more than that, the war is as depressing in the street as it is in the rest of the country.

Of the 40,000-plus dead in Vietnam, more than a few have been connected with the financial community. Even aside from that, the brokers are as tired as everyone else with hearing the endless casualty reports and noting the lack of progress in ending the war.

That's where the moratorium comes in. No matter what the public mouthpieces of the Nixon administration claim, it is clear that the moratorium struck home in the White House.

WALKING PAPERS

How else can anyone explain the announcement that Selective Service Director Hershey, a prime target of the protesters, has been given his walking papers?

Why else did the White House make the announcement four months before the fact and before any successor was named?

And what other reason could there be for leaking the word that the new draft boss will be a civilian?

Similarly, the news that Nixon will make a television speech on Vietnam—a move made public three weeks before the date of the talk—carried the same aura of trying to cool off the demonstration before it got started.

ALL NOT LOST

All of this was certainly not lost on the street. Indeed, while most brokers tended their knitting on Wednesday, a good number of the younger hot-shots have been active in anti-war groups over the past few years.

Whether they supported the moratorium or not, many brokers felt it was clear that it was pushing the administration and that the president was feeling the shove.

Along with the first sighting of a possible relaxation of the credit reins, it was enough to give the stock market its most explosive upward shove of the year.

THIS photograph taken in 1910 shows the original Ford of Canada plant — the slope-roofed building just left of the centre water tower. The building was demolished in 1915. Surrounding it are a four-storey building on the waterfront, an office building to the right and another building directly behind the original plant. All these buildings, along with a six-storey building erected on the site of the original plant, are scheduled to be demolished. (CP Photo).

Historic Ford Buildings To Crumble Under Hammer

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Tenders have been called for the demolition of six industrially historic buildings on the riverfront property of Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd.

The buildings, five on Riverside Drive overlooking the Detroit River and the sixth—originally used as a powerhouse, across the street—were put up from 1910 to 1916.

The company hopes to arrange for an historic marker to be installed on the property. There are no immediate plans for the 17-acre site following demolition.

It was in these buildings in 1914 that the moving-assembly-line principle of automobile production was first tried and proven successful in Canada.

The following year, Ford of Canada's first general manager, Gordon McGregor, announced the company would pay a minimum of $4 a day to all employees, setting a trend for Canadian industry.

The most vivid memory associated with the old buildings is the Model T and its successor, the Model A.

ASSEMBLY SUCCEEDED

The Model T went into production in late 1908 but was not produced in great quantity until the use of the moving assembly line.

By 1927, when production of the Model T was stopped, 757,888 had come off the Windsor assembly lines.

The Model A's era went from 1927 to 1932, with production totalling 266,768.

In 1937 a new assembly plant was built and the six buildings were converted for the manufacture of components, parts and accessories distribution, and as the company's central office.

The demolition is part of a huge expansion program for Ford of Canada in Windsor, where Canada's first manufacturer of motor vehicles began operations 65 years ago.

By next spring, the company says, a multi-million-dollar program to convert the former transmission and chassis plant to a second engine plant will be completed, doubling production capacity for Ford V-8 engines to more than 900,000 annually and increasing employment to at least 5,600 from 5,200.

Leitch Mines Control Sold

TORONTO (CP) — Teck Corp. Ltd., a Toronto-based mining and petroleum exploration company, has increased its holdings in Leitch Gold Mines Ltd. and, along with Leitch President F. E. Hall, has taken over management of the company, N. B. Keevil, Tech Corp. president, said today.

He did not specify Teck Corp.'s shareholdings, but control has been bought from Leitch Chairman Karl Springer, who at last reports held about 100,000 of Leitch's 2,936,000 outstanding shares.

At the time of the Leitch annual meeting last spring Mr. Hall held 14,000 shares.

Mr. Keevil said his company and its subsidiary, Area Mines Ltd., are completing negotiations for control of Highland-Bell Ltd., a company also controlled by Mr. Springer, of which Leitch holds about 10 per cent of the outstanding shares.

The purchases will make Teck Corp. the second-largest shareholder in Mattagami Lake Mines, of which Leitch and Highland Bell at last report held about 650,000 shares.

Mattagami Lake Mines recently announced a new base metal discovery near Sturgeon Lake, Ont.

Stockholders Win Texas Gulf Suit

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Texas Gulf Sulphur Co. has been ordered to reimburse some stockholders who sold out after the firm had issued a press release in April, 1964, minimizing a major mineral find near Timmins, Ont.

U.S. District Judge Willis W. Ritter said in his memorandum decision that the release was "inaccurate, misleading and deceptive," and that several days elapsed before the company put the record straight.

Lawyers for Texas Gulf Sulphur said Ritter's decision could affect hundreds of suits in the United States because it was the first awarding of damages.

Ritter awarded a total of $18,012 in three suits heard at the same time. He rejected a fourth suit on grounds the plaintiffs had sold their stock well before the press release was issued.

The case involved a Texas Gulf Sulphur test of an ore deposit which began in late 1963.

Ritter said: "The authors of the release knew from visual and chemical analyses that the first core disclosed the presence of copper and zinc mineralization of ore-grade."

Named as defendants were Texas Gulf Sulphur and its executive vice-president is 1964, Charles F. Fogarty of Rye, N.Y.

The plaintiffs to whom Ritter awarded damages were George G. Reynolds of Salt Lake City, Walter A. Mitchell of Los Angeles, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Stout of Salt Lake City.

Ritter said the misleading press release may have resulted from an attempt "to hold the big news until just before, or the day of the stockholders' annual meeting" on April 23, 1964.

But he noted that Texas Gulf Sulphur, four days after the release, publicly acknowledged that it had made a substantial mineral discovery. On that day, April 16, 1964, its stock advanced nearly $7 to a high of $37.

In the next two trading days, the stock went to $44, the judge noted.

Subs to Hunt For North Oil

By DAVE McINTOSH

OTTAWA (CP) — A California exploration company proposes to use old Swedish submarines to hunt for oil in the channels among Canada's Arctic islands.

Officials said Thursday the company, Marine Resources Consultants Inc. of Santa Monica, Calif., has already signed up one oil company to back its northern venture.

With the current scramble for oil in the Arctic, it is likely to get all the backing it needs, they added. The company claims 10 firms are interested.

Representatives of Marine Resources have talked with Canadian officials about the technical aspects of the proposal. These talks are to be continued next month.

Officials of the external affairs department said the question of Canadian sovereignty is not involved.

They said the submarines would be used as a research tool and that therefore passage in the Arctic bays and channels was not at issue as it was, for instance, in the voyage of the U.S. tanker Manhattan through the Northwest Passage this summer.

One official compared use of the sumarines with exploratory offshore drilling, but conceded that Arctic prowling by three privately-owned submarines raised some "interesting questions" for the Canadian government.

U.S. nuclear submarines have traversed the Northwest Passage under the ice.

The California firm has bought three 1,000-ton submarines built in Sweden in the 1940s and declared surplus by the Royal Swedish Navy a year or so ago. Purchase price was not disclosed.

Inland Natural Gas

Inland Natural Gas Co. Ltd. reports consolidated net income of $2.28 millions, or 77 cents a share, in the year ended June 30, compared with $2.54 million (92 cents) the previous year.

The drop was attributed largely to higher costs of gas purchased and an increase in the number of shares outstanding. The number of common shares rose to 2.57 million from 2.34 million.

The company, which serves interior B.C., said gross revenue rose to $15.28 million from $13.78 million, and operating costs increased to $4.68 million from $4.36 million.

Look to Manitoba

Premier Schreyer of Manitoba said two Japanese textile companies and a petrochemical firm will send experts to Manitoba to explore possibilities of forming joint ventures with Canadian interests. Schreyer identified the textile companies as Toyo Rayon Co. and Kanegafuji Spinning Co. He said executives of the companies expressed "great interest" in establishing joint ventures in Manitoba.

Boise Cascade

Boise Cascade Corp. reported Thursday that shareholders of West Tacoma Newsprint Co. had approved a merger.

The shareholders' approval came at a special meeting at the company headquarters at Steilacoon, Wash.

The merger agreement provides for the exchange of an undisclosed amount of Boise Cascade common stock.

West Tacoma Newsprint is owned by 40 newspaper publishers, who formed it in 1946 primarily to serve their newsprint needs, and has annual production capacity of 120,000 tons. It also has timber holdings in western Washington.

Investment Deal

Chemcell Ltd. and Bralorne Oil and Gas Ltd. have reached agreement in principle which involves an anticipated investment by Chemcell of more than $15-million in the oil and gas industry in the next five years.

Under the agreement Chemcell, a leading Canadian producer of chemicals, synthetic fibres, fabrics and carpets, would acquire a controlling interest in Bralorne by the end of 1974.

Retail Sales Down

Retail sales in Saskatchewan dropped by almost $100,000,000 during the first nine months of this year compared with the same period in 1968, says the province's Retail Merchants Association. Retail sales during the period this year totalled $899,783,140, compared with $994,036,980 in 1968, a drop of 9.43 per cent.

Compost Heap Building Elaborate or Simple

By JACK BEASTALL

The actual building of a compost heap can be as elaborate or as simple as the gardener cares to make it.

Jack

It can be built in a box made of wood with two-inch air spaces between the boards, or a box made of hollow cement blocks set on edge to let air through the holes, or of ornamental cement blocks.

A temporary bin can be made of chicken wire on stakes driven into the bround, (this method is excellent for leaves) or the pile can be built in the open if large amounts of waste materials are involved.

Tips for the Home Gardener

We start with bare soil that has been lightly disturbed with a fork. On this we put a layer of waste material, chopped into short lengths and well mixed, that is, an assortment of grass, leaves, and stems.

If the material is dry, a 12-inch depth will equal about six inches when weighted down by the succeeding layers. If damp green material, six to eight inches is sufficient for a layer.

Next, the layer is well watered, then the activator applied. This may be a proprietary product used as directed, or a dusting of fertilizer or powdered dry chicken manure, or a two-inch layer of fresh cow or horse manure.

Another layer of waste material is put on, well shaken out and mixed, another soaking of water, then a very light dusting of hydrated lime.

This is continued until all the material is stacked, one layer watered and the activator applied, the next layer watered and a dusting of lime.

Wed shredded newspaper and cardboard should be well mixed with the plant wastes in each layer.

It is also a good idea to put some freshly gathered weeds, with soil on their roots, between each layer of collected material. The soil will inoculate the heap with the necessary bacteria, yeasts, and moulds that must be present to convert plant tissues back to soil.

Tramping down is only necessary when the material is very dry and loose, for the purpose of tramping is to reduce the amount of air in the heap. But never compact to a point where air cannot penetrate.

Some methods call for an old stove pipe in the centre of the heap, which when removed after the heap is completed, allows air to enter the centre of the heap.

Other methods call for holes punched into the heap with a crowbar. These practices are only necessary when a heap is six to ten feet wide.

Leaves in quantity are loose and bulky. They are best put into a separate heap within a large temporary bin of old shiplap.

It is amazing the quantity of leaves that can occupy a small space if they are tramped down every day for a week or so. Children love playing in leaves so let them romp on the pile.

There is no distinct layering when the pile is built of leaves, so activator, water and lime is applied at reasonable intervals.

Now comes the good news for the gardener who has only small quantities of household and garden wastes.

When quantities are not sufficient from making a heap of a size to generate the required 180 degree temperature in the first 48 hours, it is best to bury the material directly into the soil as it accumulates.

Dig a trench in vacant ground one spade deep and wide, and long enough to take the wastes on hand. Scatter the waste loosely, sprinkly with activator and lime, water well and cover with soil taken from an extension of the trench.

This goes on all winter, digging trenches back and forth across vacant round, using the first soil removed to cover the last few feet of trench.

While this "burying" method improves the soil in any vacant area, it cannot be practised in beds and borders where permanent plants are growing because the trenching would damage roots, and the decomposing would take nitrogen needed by the plants.

Compost can be left to decompose to a fine brown mold, or it can be used in a half decomposed state. The latter condition is best for binding sandy or gravelly soils and for opening clay soils. The finer material is good for top dressing beds and borders.

We have now covered the story of composting in a brief and simplified series of articles.

We have shown that soil in which plants will grow is composed of powdered rock and decomposed plant and animal wastes called humus.

The wastes are converted to chemicals which plants convert into growth cells, the wastes (or humus content of the soil) decreasing with every inch of growth.

To continue growth and health, humus must be constantly added as fast, or faster, than it is consumed.

Vigorous and healthy plants resist diseases, pests, and low temperatures. Given a good soil, plants can take care of themselves.

Gardeners spend hours and dollars spraying, fertilizing, and fussing to make plants grow. If all this time and money, or even one half of it, was put into composting — into making a soil in which the plants could find all they need — gardening problems would rapidly decrease and gradually disappear.

You cannot build any article without the necessary raw materials, nor can you grow plants without the necessary raw material. That material is soil — not inert soil — but soil full of humus and organisms that make it a "living soil."

New Irish Decimal Coinage To Be Introduced in '71

DUBLIN — In about 16 months (Feb. 15, 1971, to be exact), decimal currency is to be introduced in Ireland.

Six new coins will replace the seven which currently are in circulation in the republic.

As shown in the accompanying illustration, the new coins (with approximate Canadian values in brackets) are: halfpenny (1.3 cents), one penny (2½ cents), two pence (five cents), five pence (13 cents), 10 pence (25 cents), and 50 pence ($1.30).

Under the new system, the pound (currently worth about $2.58 Canadian) will be divided into 100 new pence instead of 240 pence (20 shillings of 12 pence each) as at present.

Visitors from abroad should find the new system easier to understand although for a period, when both coinages are in circulation, some confusion will undoubtedly occur. To help counter this, the new coins will be known as new pence—new halfpenny, ten new pence, and so on. However, because of the higher value of the new pence, a two new pence coin (about five cents Canadian) will be worth more than the old (present) threepence coin (about three cents Canadian).

Three of the new coins—the 5-, 10-, and 50-pence ones—will carry designs from old coins: the bull on the five new pence piece is used on the current shilling piece; the salmon on the 10 new pence coin is used on the present florin or two-shilling piece; and the woodcock on the seven-sided 50 new pence coin was formerly used on an old quarter-pence coin that has been out of circulation for many years.

The 5, 10 and 50 new pence pieces will be of cupro nickel.

The designs on the new bronze halfpenny, penny and two-pence pieces are new, all being adaptations of ornamental bird details.

All six new coins will carry the harp (with the inscription "Eire" and year) as the obverse design. This design is also carried on the obverse of current coins.

STAMP NEWS

Czarist 1913 Issue Ironic

By ROBERT G. OLIPHANT

Jan. 2, 1913, the Russian Empire issued 17 stamps commemorating the 300th anniversary of the founding of the Romanov dynasty.

It was in 1613 that a national assembly unanimously elected Michael Feodorovich Romanov (1596-1645) czar of Russia. A portrait of this bearded monarch is reproduced on the 70-kopeck value, and Michael's son and heir, Alexis I (1629-76) is shown on the 25-kopeck adhesive.

One of Alexis' sons, Peter I (1672-1725), known as "the Great," was a dynamic, semi-barbarous giant who made Russia a European state. Likenesses of him are on the 1-kopeck and 4-kopeck stamps. A Russian semi-postal of 1905 portrays the bronze statue of Peter I on horseback, which was erected in St. Petersburg (now Leningrad), which he founded.

Elizabeth (1709-62), a daughter of Peter the Great, is depicted on the 50-kopeck stamp. She was succeeded by her nephew Peter III (1728-62).

Catherine II (b. 1729), called "the Great," was the wife of the unpopular Peter III, and she was Empress of Russia after his removal from the throne in 1762, to her death in 1796. A portrait of Catherine the Great is on the 14-kopeck value.

Romanov Castle is featured on the 3-ruble stamp.

Thirty-five kopecks is the denomination of the stamp showing a terrible czar, Paul I (1754-1801), who was a son (and the successor) of Catherine the Great. Paul's eldest son and successor was Alexander I (1777-1825), whose army turned back Napoleon's 1812 invasion of Russia. Alexander I is pictured on the 20-kopeck postage stamp.

Succeeding Alexander I was his brother Nicholas I (1796-1855), who was known, for his severe rule, as the "Iron Czar." A portrait of him is featured on the 15-kopeck adhesive.

Shown on the 2-kopeck stamp is a son (and the heir) of Nicholas I, Alexander II (1818-81), the "Czar-Liberator." He abolished serfdom in 1861, and was assassinated by a revolutionist in St. Petersburg.

A portrait of the gruff and strong-willed successor and son of Alexander II, Alexander III (1845-94), appears on the 3-kopeck stamp.

The 7-kopeck, 10-kopeck and 5-rubble values bear a likeness of Nicholas Alexandrovich Romanov (b. 1868). He was "emperor and autocrat of all the Russias" as Nicholas II, from the death of his father Alexander III in 1894, to his abdication in March, 1917. Along with his wife and five children, Nicholas II was executed by the Bolsheviks in July, 1918.

On the one-ruble pictorial is represented a view of the centre of the Soviet Union's government today, the Kremlin.

Depicted on the two-ruble commemorative is the huge Imperial Winter Palace in St. Petersburg which now houses items pertaining to the Russian Revolution of 1917. During that year Imperial Russia died, and the Soviet republic was born.

It's ironic that a stamp honoring the House of Romanov at a time of celebration shows a building which today remains as a reminder of its collapse.

Diagnosis Shows TV Today Ailing

By JACK GOULD

NEW YORK — Television has the blahs.

To the extent that the new shows this fall are an indication of the medium's vigor and resourcefulness, TV is wallowing in banality and manifest uncertainty. In the crucial premiere month of September, what was to be remembered? The Mets in their dressing room and Woody Allen.

The experience may not be a bad thing for TV. Through governmental pressure and cyclical fatigue, programs relying on violence have been weeded out.

The medium suddenly is confronted by a problem: It is going to have to dig up and give a break to competent writers who can tell a story and devise characterizations worth a viewer's time.

The middle road of blandness, over-populated to the point of exasperation by widows and widowers, is leading nowhere. It is TV's multifaceted narcotic appeal that enables it to enjoy profitability while being essentially second-rate, but television had best be careful not to count too strongly on the hypnotic power of its ennui.

The concern over TV violence has been wildly exaggerated; the deeper social concern—with much more serious implications—is the question of when TV is going to start saying something, be it in entertainment, news or documentaries.

TV's peril is not that it will annoy some viewers, the danger is that the viewer will take it for granted, passively, as he does the telephone or the kitchen stove.

Since there is a touch of hypochondria in almost every viewer, the latest cycle of medical shows is probably a built-in success—"Medical Centre" on C. B. S., one-third of N. B. C.'s rotating dramatic series "The Bold Ones" and "Marcus Welby, M.D." on A. B. C. And, if the patient, rather than the doctor—as happened in the surprisingly natural acting debut of O. J. Simpson, the football player, on the premiere of "Medical Centre"—occupies the centre of attention, the familiar format may take a welcome twist.

Only time will tell whether the new medical shows will come to grips with such realities as the cost of medicine, inadequate facilities in many communities, and other problems.

Of the new weekly half-hour series only one appears to have the makings of some genuine distinction. "Room 222," Wednesday nights on A. B. C. meets reality with a measure of both credibility and charm. Lloyd Haynes' as a black teacher of American history in an integrated high school, is a civilized faculty member—that's one huge relief in TV—and his co-star, Denise Nicholas, is beguiling. Karen Valentine, as the eager white student teacher, has a challenging acting test in such company.

"Room 222" merits encouragement, both for itself and as an augury of how TV might be both grown-up and entertaining at the same time. Stardom for Haynes in the years ahead would seem almost guaranteed.

WORK FOR WEEK

Planting of deciduous trees and shrubs can go ahead as they lose their leaves. This applies to those being dug from nurseries and includes roses. But magnolias, dogwoods and tulip-trees (liriodendron) are better moved in spring.

Container grown plants can be put in at any convenient time so long as ground is not frozen or stickily wet.

Get spring bedding schemes completed with pansies, polyanthuses, wall flowers and bulbs.

Broadleaved evergreens and conifers planted now will root well. Many require peaty soil — enquire when purchasing.

If slightly heated greenhouse is used, cuttings of yellow marguerites, creeping phlox, iberis, aubrieta and many other "soft" plants can be taken for rotting in sandy peat in winter.

BEETHOVEN, CHOPIN

Noon hour concert in University of Victoria's MacLaurin Building, Tuesday, at 12:30, will feature well-known pianist and Conservatory of Music principal, Robin Wood.

The program he will present consists of Beethoven's Sonata in C Op. 2, No. 3, Chopin's F minor Ballade and Grand Chromatic Galop by Franz Liszt.

There is no admission charge for these concerts which are arranged by the music division for students and faculty but which are open to the public.

However, contributions may be made to the Taylor Scholarship Fund for music students.

Joint School Use Under Study

Provincial and municipal government representatives will study methods of opening up schools to the entire community.

Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell and Education Minister Donald Brothers Friday met representatives of B.C. Parent-Teachers Federation to discuss the federation's brief on joint use of community facilities.

The brief recommended that the Public Schools Act be amended to permit joint financing of school-community activities and facilities.

"We believe communities and school boards could at the same time save money and enormously enrich the life of our people," the brief stated.

Campbell said after the meeting the study of joint use of schools would involve the B.C. School Trustees Association and the Union of B.C. Municipalities.

HOTEL PLANNED FOR WHARF

NANAIMO—Plans are being readied to establish a hotel and marina complex at the downtown Nanaimo wharf of the CPR.

A spokesman for Marathon Realty, a subsidiary of CPR, said in Vancouver Friday a detailed announcement, including construction time and possible completion date, will be announced in early 1970.

Mayor Frank Ney welcomed the announcement as an indication the city is destined to become a tourist and convention centre.

"This is wonderful news for Nanaimo city and for the whole surrounding area," he said.

Senior Advisors Meet

Senior citizens serving as counsellors in 41 B.C. communities will meet Oct. 26 to 28 in New Westminster.

The conference will discuss housing, health care, recreation and community services. Welfare minister Dan Campbell said the conference is designed to produce streamlined methods of dealing with B.C.'s 140,000 senior citizens.

First-Period Brawl at Oakland

Bill WALKER

For a dull day, there's nothing like predicting the finish of something or other. Everyone else is doing it, and not all of them are going to be right.

But then an expert is a guy from out of town, and out here we certainly are far enough out to get the job done more easily than those who will let sentiment interfere with their good judgment.

So be it, and therefore what follows is how the National Hockey League teams will finish this season. You can bet on it, but use your own money, not mine.

There's no better place to start than at the top. That's where Montreal Canadiens finished up last year and that's where they should be this year. They are still the best team in hockey, and have the poise, the depth, Jean Beliveau, the Pocket Rocket and John Ferguson to help prove it. Besides they have a couple of pretty fair goalkeepers in Rogatien Vachon and Gump Worsley.

Boston has just as much as Montreal with the possible exception of poise. They are big, rough, can score goals and have the finest defenceman playing today, Bobby Orr. And there's one of the question marks. Orr. If his knees hold up, the Bruins could threaten. But then the loss of Ted Green will need to be offset as well. Phil Esposito, Ken Hodge and Ron Murphy will shoulder most of the scoring load.

The New York Rangers haven't changed all that much from last year when they bombed out in the playoffs. But they should be right there again at the finish.

Ed Giacomin is a fine goalkeeper, and he has help from Terry Sawchuk, 39. They have a good defence, ice leaders in Jean Ratelle and Rod Gilbert, and a hard-skating club. If Sawchuk can fill in for Giacomin and get the job done, then the Rangers could be tough. Third is their allotted place in life.

Toronto has a new general manager and a new coach and several new players. They also have Tim Horton, all-star. Their defence otherwise is suspect with young players who sometimes take too many foolish penalties. Up front Norm Ullman, Dave Keon and Mike Walton should produce. Little changed from last year, they should finish in the same place, fourth.

Gordie Howe, Frank Mahovlich and Alex Delvecchio scored almost one-half of Detroit's total of 239 goals last season. And they will need to repeat that performance of 118 goals to be a factor. Roger Crozier is a question mark in goal, but Roy Edwards may be the replacement the Wings are looking for. Depending on how their veterans perform the Wings for fifth, and a threat to oust Toronto from fourth.

Chicago needs Bobby Hull, and Dennis Hull and a hull of a lot more. The Hawks are off to a rocky start, and the road ahead is likely to get a lot bumpier. Stan Mikita is there, but Kenny Wharram has gone. The defence is weak and the big hope is that some youngsters will come along and fill the holes that are showing. Last place is their home now, and for all season.

In the Western Division, it's like the East. Poise, depth, and two championships make St. Louis an overwhelming favorite to do it all over again. The Blues have three fine centres in Phil Goyette, Red Berenson and Frank St. Marseille. They are solid all the way they have secured Ernie Wakely to replace Hall as a backup goalie for Jacques Plante. Hall was a tower of strength last year, but even without him (and that isn't certain), the Blues are No. 1.

If Charlie Hodge and ex-Maple Leaf Gary Smith can hold the line, then Oakland could chase St. Louis right down to the wire. They have fine talent in Ted Hampson, 26 and 49 last year, Norm Ferguson who scored 34 goals, a solid defence anchored by Carol Vadnais and Bert Marshall and established veterans like Gerry Ehman and Bill Hicke. Hustle may be their downfall as they did falter badly in last year's playoffs.

Los Angeles was here and looked big and willing enough. They will have a hard-hitting crew now that Larry Cahan is back in the fold and, if they get Bill White again, then watch out. One thing is certain. Coach Hal Laycoe will have them fit enough to finish third, or if Oakland should falter, one better.

Pittsburgh is the unknown quantity and could be anywhere from second best to the bottom of the heap. They have Al Smith, the ex-Victorian to spell Les Binkley in goal. They have secured Dean Prentice, and they have a number of new players. Well, not exactly new, but veterans from other NHL clubs and if they happen to jell then the Penguins could be tough.

The muscle club of the group is Philadelphia. The defence is big and intimidating with fellows like Ed Van Impe, Larry Hillman and Joe Watson. And if that isn't enough they also have Reg Fleming and Bryan Watson. Bernie Parent is a fine goalkeeper and Doug Favell is an able replacement. Trouble is the Flyers couldn't score goals last year although they had the second best defensive record in the league. That's the problem that may result in a fifth place finish.

That leaves the Minnesota North Stars for the basement. They didn't show up well in the exhibition circuit, but then neither did some of the other clubs. Their defence is weak, and besides they are in the middle of a rebuilding movement. It won't be completed in time.

And speaking of time, that's it.

Duff Undergoes Surgery; Oakland Clips Kings 5-1

By The Canadian Press

The National Hockey League may be a safer circuit to play in following penalties handed out to two stick-swingers—but the medical lists continue to grow with even inactive players taking to hospital beds.

Montreal Canadiens' left-winger Dick Duff Friday was the latest addition to the invalid count when he entered hospital for minor surgery.

The 33-year-old veteran had not played in any regular season games and had been considering retirement. A club spokesman said Duff was expected to be 10 to 14 days recuperating from the surgery, but did not give the nature of the operation.

The two penalized players were Ted Green of Boston Bruins and Wayne Maki of St. Louis Blues. NHL president Clarence Campbell announced $300 fines and 30-day suspensions for each of the participants in a stick-swing duel during an exhibition match Sept. 21 in Ottawa.

Green may be out of action for the rest of the season with a skull fracture suffered in the incident.

HICKE SPARKLES

In Friday's only scheduled game, Oakland Seals grabbed first place in the Western Division with a 5-1 victory over Los Angeles Kings.

Rightwinger Bill Hicke scored two goals to lead the Seals' attack and set Brian Perry up for another to give Seals a 3-0 lead at the end of the first period. Norm Ferguson and rookie Joe Hardy also beat Los Angeles goalie Gerry Desjardins.

Ted Irvine was the lone Los Angeles scorer against Gary Smith who was in the Oakland nets. Smith now has won both of his two starts, allowing one goal in each.

Among other players still on the casualty list are Bob Pulford and Rickey Ley of Toronto Maple Leafs, Gilles Tremblay of the Canadiens, Kenny Wharram of Chicago Black Hawks, Roger Crozier of Detroit Red Wings and Derek Sanderson of the Bruins.

HAWKS WINLESS

Pulford, with a pulled back muscle, and Ley, with a badly-bruised foot, were both expected to be in the lineup for the Leafs tonight against Chicago in Toronto.

Wharram is recuperating from a heart ailment and club doctors say he is listed in fair condition. The Hawks, who have yet to resolve a contract dispute with star winger Bobby Hull, will have seven rookies in their lineup against the Leafs and against Minnesota North Stars Sunday.

The Hawks Friday elected defenceman Pat Stapleton as team captain, filling the vacancy left by Pierre Pilote, who was traded to the Leafs a year ago.

Tremblay also had not played a regular season game with Canadiens, but had been skating in team practice in the hope of coming back to his left-wing spot after a respiratory ailment kept him out most of last season. However, he went back into hospital again Wednesday with the same ailment.

Cougars Test Kamloops Club

Victoria Cougars' coach Doug Anderson insists Kamloops Rockets and Vernon Essos shape up as the teams to beat for B.C. Junior Hockey League honors, but Vancouver's fledgling Centennials offer an "I-beg-your-early-pardon!"

The newest entry, the upstart Centennials closed to within one point of leading Victoria by defeating Penticton Broncos 5-2 Friday.

Now Victoria fans can file their own early assessments. The revamped Rockets, under new coach Joe Tennant, make their first appearance by playing the Cougars tonight in Memorial Arena. Game time is 8:30.

RIDDELL HURTING

Injuries pose as Anderson's main worry for tonight's game. Rookie Chris Riddell joined holdover Shayne Webster and winger Pat Askew on Victoria's doubtful-starter list.

Webster is sidelined with a bruised hip while Askew is out with a knee injury. Riddell stopped a hard shot on an ankle in Thursday's workout and may be forced to sit out tonight's game unless the injury responds to last-minute treatment.

Late letdowns in each period enabled Vancouver to come from behind Friday and decision the Broncs before 1,050 fans in Penticton. Vancouver counted goals in the closing moments of each period.

Doug Burlingame and Randy Nelson provided Penticton with an early 2-1 lead before Vancouver's attack moved into high gear. Defenceman Pat Russell, Ray Todd, Neil Murphy, Fred Lawless and Denis Metcalf scored for Vancouver.

It was a cleanly-played affair with only six penalties called, four to Penticton. Russell scored his goal—Vancouver's first—with Penticton playing short-handed.

Murphy scored what proved to be the winning goal on a freak play. He slapped a long but hard drive that rebounded off the backboards, bounced over the net and dribbled into the goal off startled goalie Fred Whitlow.

Centennials wrap up their first Okanagan jaunt by playing in Kelowna tonight and in Vernon on Sunday.

First in Line For Wing Job?

TORONTO (CP) —The Globe and Mail says Ted Lindsay may succeed Bill Gadsby as coach of the National Hockey League's Detroit Red Wings.

Lindsay was a member of Detroit's famous Production Line with Gordie Howe and Sid Abel who now is manager of the Red Wings and acting coach after Gadsby was fired Thursday night.

Lions Facing Tough Defence

By The Canadian Press

British Columbia Lions will carry the momentum of two victories in a row tonight as they tangle with Edmonton Eskimos in their battle for a playoff berth in the Western Football Conference.

Less than two weeks ago the Lions looked like anything but a serious playoff contender. Then they nipped the Eskimos 13-5 in Clarke Stadium and followed that one up with a 21-12 decision over Montreal Alouettes.

The wins brought them from obscurity to within two points of the third-place Eskimos who would like to nail down that playoff berth. Idle Winnipeg is fourth with seven points, one behind Edmonton.

The Eskimos bring the toughest defence in the league to Empire Stadium where they defeated the Lions in the first meeting between the two clubs, also by a 13-5 score.

Lions coach Jackie Parker and Edmonton mentor Neill Armstrong are looking for line play to decide the outcome.

Parker says the play of guards Ken Sugarman and Trev Ekdahl and centre Bob Howes will likely determine the outcome while Armstrong is expecting tackles John LaGrone and Greg Pipes and middle linebacker Jerry Griffin to thwart the Lions running game.

MUST STOP EVENSON

And the big man they will have to stop is Jim Evenson who racked up 178 yards last Saturday against Montreal in his bid to overhaul Saskatchewan's George Reed for the WFC rushing crown.

Reed, who has 1,081 yards to Evenson's 1,027, will have a chance to widen that gap Sunday in Regina as the Roughriders attempt to nail down the WFC crown in a contest with second-place Calgary Stampeders four points behind.

Both fullbacks have carried the ball 213 times.

This means Calgary will have to concentrate on stopping Reed while attempting to move the ball without regular signal-caller Jerry Keeling who is out with an ankle injury and not expected to play.

"I haven't worked out with the club this week and coach Jim Duncan hasn't given me a ready list so I guess he's trying to tell me something."

Keeling is the top passer in the WFC with 217 completions in 392 attempts for 3,023 yards and 19 touchdowns.

Bill Redell will call the signals if Keeling doesn't dress.

MAY SET RECORDS

A couple of records could be set this weekend, which also has Hamilton Tiger-Cats travelling to Toronto for a game with the Argonauts Sunday in that tight Eastern Conference race.

A touchdown for Reed would give him a CFL record for career touchdowns rushing. He now shares the mark of 74 with former Calgary and Edmonton great Normie Kwong.

Another interception for John Wydareny of Edmonton will break a WFC record of 10 which he shares with several other players. The CFL mark is 11, held by Don Sutherin of Ottawa Rough Riders.

Wydareny and Sutherin have both snared 10 wayward passes this season.

Greatest Margin Polled by Hodges

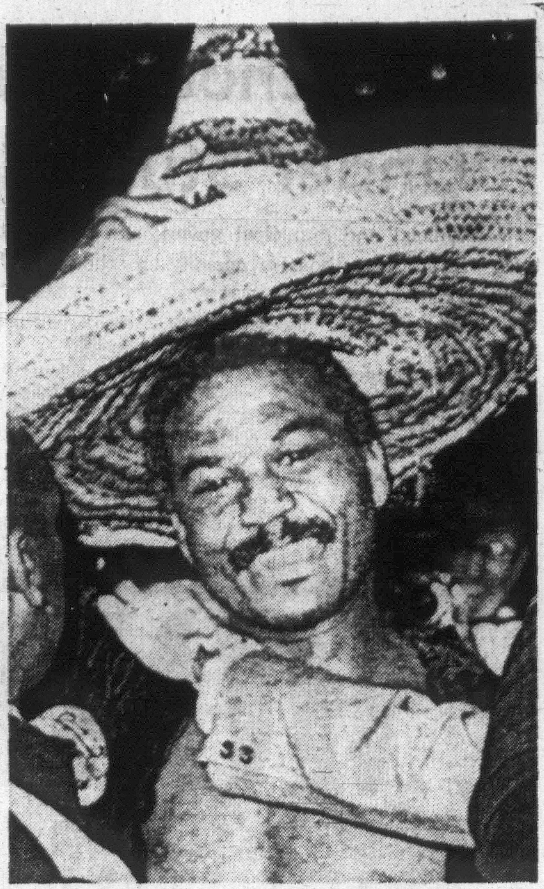
NEW YORK (AP) — Gil Hodges, the soft-spoken miracle worker who molded New York Mets into baseball's greatest success story, has been selected the National League manager of the year in the annual Associated Press poll.

The 45-year-old former Dodger great captured the honor Friday by one of the greatest margins ever when he polled 267 votes to only 10 for second-place Luman Harris of Atlanta Braves.

Although the amazing Mets completed their fairy-tale rise from bungling bumpkins to baseball's best Thursday by winning the World Series, Hodges carried the day on the strength of their stunning stretch run to the National League pennant.

The balloting among sportswriters and broadcasters throughout the country was taken before the Series began.

The only other managers to receive votes were Clyde King of San Francisco Giants, and Leo Durocher of Chicago Cubs with three each and Harry Walker of Houston Astros with one.



STILL CHAMPION

Surrounded by his jubiliant fans, Jose Napoles of Mexico dons sombrero and flashes big smile after retaining world welterweight boxing crown by earning unanimous decision in bout with former champion Emile Griffith at Los Angeles Friday night. (AP Wirephoto.)

Favored Jose Retains Crown

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Welterweight champion Jose (Mantequilla) Napoles of Mexico City floored his opponent with a bolo-like right in the third round and went on to win a unanimous decision in 15 rounds over Emile Griffith of New York, at the Forum Friday night.

The decision was unanimous and the action was spirited throughout as Napoles, 29, Mexico's adopted son from Cuba, successfully defended the crown for the second time.

Napoles, a 2½-1 favorite going into the ring before an estimated 15,000, weighed 144¾, and Griffith, originally from the Virgin Islands, 144½.

The hard-hitting champion, who had knocked out 39 opponents in 58 fights, connected with his jolting short right swung from the hip. He caught Griffith on the jaw 20 seconds into the third round. Griffith was up at the count of four but took the automatic eight count from referee Dick Young.

The ex-champ, who vacated the 147-pound division title when he won the middleweight title in 1966, fought with a badly bruised and swollen right cheekbone from the sixth round on.

But aside from a slight trickle of blood from the nose by Napoles early in the final round neither fighter was seriously damaged.

Thinking About Cats But Talking of Riders

TORONTO (CP) — The Argonauts, preparing to battle Hamilton Tiger-Cats here Sunday to hang onto second place in the Eastern Football Conference, may be thinking Hamilton but they're talking Ottawa.

Specifically, they're speaking of Vic Washington, all-star halfback lost to Ottawa Rough Riders for the rest of the season.

Ottawa is four points ahead of runner-up Toronto, atop the EFC. Toronto is one point ahead of Hamilton.

Washington suffered a torn median ligament in his right leg in the Oct. 15 game against Winnipeg Blue Bombers.

"You know what that does to their offence," said Bobby Taylor of the Argos. "It means you can double-cover Adkins or Tucker and key on Mankins."

MANKINS GETS LOAD

With Washington out, it leaves Margene Adkins and Whit Tucker as Ottawa's main pass-catching threats and throws the backfield load onto fullback Jim Mankins.

Defensive back Dick Thornton of the Argos says "they'll probably run more with Ronnie Stewart now. And they'll have to find another running back."

"If they use Gene Gaines, that'll wreck their defence."

All three teams—Montreal Alouettes are out of it—have their sights on first place in the EFC.

Coach Frank Clair of Ottawa is searching the Continental League for a halfback.

"Injuries are always a problem," he said. "We have a lot of people hurt right now. We're lucky we've got 10 days until our game against Toronto."

The Hamilton-Toronto encounter, at 2 p.m. EDT Sunday, will be televised on the eastern network of CTV, while the game between Calgary Stampeders and Saskatchewan Roughriders of the Western Conference will appear on the CTV western network.

NOBODY HAS APPLIED . . . . . . FOR JOB WITH TWINS

Cal Has Started Annual Hunt

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Calvin Griffith formally opened Friday what is turning out to be an annual hunt, finding a new manager for Minnesota Twins of the American League.

It won't be Billy Martin, the third manager fired in three years.

Griffith, president and general manager, said he is sticking by his decision of last Monday not to rehire Martin, whose firing touched off widespread criticism.

"Nobody has applied," said Griffith. "I have spoken to various people recommending people for the job. But I have not talked to any persons about the job for 1970."

Names being tossed around include Bill Rigney, former California manager; Billy Hunter, Baltimore coach, and Eddie Yost, New York Mets' coach. But Hunter and Yost have been quoted as saying they would not consider the job unless more than a one-year contract was offered.

A one-year contract, Griffith said, "is my policy and I'm hoping I can adhere to it."

Regarding the ouster of Martin, who managed the Twins to the championship of the American League's Western Division in his first year, Griffith said there were "various things that pertained to his dismissal."

Not among those, he said, were Martin's fistfight with pitcher Dave Boswell, three straight losses to Baltimore in the playoffs nor complaints to Griffith by five players about Martin's managing.

Griffith said Martin defied front-office policy and guidelines.

"I thought when I asked him to come in he should come in and discuss our situation," said Griffith. "He did make some appointments with me to discuss problems but he didn't show up. I didn't like it."

Army Betrays Palmer; Sanders Still on Top

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP)—Arnold Palmer was betrayed by his army, and Doug Sanders was bothered by his alarm clock. In Doug's case it didn't hurt badly, but in Arnie's instance, well . . .

"It hurts like hell," the aging charger said with a rueful grin.

Palmer, listening to his gallery when he couldn't spot an errant shot on the 15th hole, made a mistake that cost him a whopping nine on the hole and virtually destroyed his chances for a successful comeback.

Playboy Sanders was stuck with an early morning starting time and went from an opening 65 to a par 71 on the Sahara Nevada Country Club course Friday but still held the half-way lead in the $100,000 Sahara Invitational golf tournament, one stroke ahead of a quintet headed by menacing Jack Nicklaus.

Nicklaus, who has shed 15 pounds in the last three weeks, and defending champion Chi Chi Rodriguez each had a second round 68 for 137 and were tied with Terry Dill, 66, Steve Spray, 70, and rookie Ted Hayes, 71.

In a group at 138 were Bob Menne, 72, Dave Hill, 67, Kermit Zarley, 70, and Steve Reid 68.

JUST MAKES CUT

Palmer, out of action for two months with an aching hip, is making his first start since the PGA national championship. He had a solid 69 in the opening round but, weighted by the big nine, took a 75 Friday for 144. He just made the cut for the final two rounds.

The 15th is a par five, 536-yard layout with a dogleg to the left. Palmer put his drive in the right rough but had a pretty good opening to the green.

"I never saw my second shot," he said. "It must have hooked out of bounds.

"I was told it was out of bounds. So I dropped a provisional ball. Then I was told it was in bounds." He said later that all the advice came from the gallery. "I questioned this for a second or two, then picked up the provisional ball.

"When I got to the green, the ball was out of bounds."

So it was two strokes for out of bounds and two for picking up the provisional ball. He went back to the right rough, dropped and was lying five when he took his second swing.

Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg also made the cut with a 72-73—145. Bob Panasuik of Windsor, Ont., dropped out with a 73-73—146.

MUSTANGS MAKING BID TO SNAP LOSING SKEIN

For James Bay Mustangs, Sunday brings a chance to chalk up their first victory of the Vancouver Island Juvenile Football League season.

For Oak Bay Farmer Construction it's a chance to move back into undisputed possession of first place.

Mustangs, winless after five starts in the current campaign, hope to hit the victory circle when they tackle Cowichan Timbermen at Centennial Stadium Sunday at 2 p.m.

At the same time, Farmers will be at Nanaimo to face the Rams and planning to stretch their unbeaten record. Idle last weekend when the once-beaten Saanich Chew Hornets pulled into a first-place tie, Farmers are planning to again step ahead of the Hornets, who are not scheduled to play this weekend.

Spurs' Late Kick Pains Vancouver

By THE CANADIAN PRESS

Denver Spurs overcame a 3-1 first-period deficit to edge Vancouver Canucks 4-3 Friday night and grab undisputed possession of first place in the Western Hockey League.

In Phoenix, Portland Buckaroos rebounded from two losses to hand the Roadrunners their first defeat of the season by a 5-3 count and Salt Lake City whipped Seattle 7-3 in the Utah city.

In Vancouver, the Spurs, who spent most of last season as the league's doormats, disappointed 7,761 fans as they scored the last three goals of the game.

The loss was the second of the season for the Canucks and both have been on home ice.

SHARE SCORING

Gerry LaFond, Del Topoll, Brian McDonald and Georges Guilbault shared the Spurs scoring while Paul Andrea with two tallies and Bob Lemieux gave the Canucks their early lead.

Guilbault scored the winner midway through the second period when he took advantage of a sloppy Canuck defence to fire a drive that hit the open left side of the net.

In Phoenix, Bill Saunders played a key role in setting up three goals as the Bucks took the lead before 7,180 fans in the second period.

Norm Johnson, Andy Hebenton, Roger Bellerive, Gerry Goyer and Ken Campbell shared the Portland scoring chores while two markers from Sandy Snow and a late power play goal by veteran Milan Marcetta accounted for the Roadrunners' tallies.

ROBERTS PLEASES FANS

In Salt Lake City, 3,945 fans were delighted by a four-point performance by rightwinger Ron Roberts who fired two goals and set up two others to pace the Golden Eagles' attack.

Centre Billy McNeill also counted twice and Gerry Mazur, Dave Rochefort and Rollie Wilcox got the others as the Golden Eagles took a 3-1 lead in the first period and never looked back.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Breaking into list of winners in Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition for first time is Linda Askey (above), who topped women's fivepin division in opening week of seventh annual contest by rolling 363-308-218—899 series in Oak Bay League at Capital City Bowladrome. Another first-time winner in opening week is Sid Harknett of Duncan, who captured men's tenpin award with 214-225-191—630 effort in Wednesday Mixed League at Duncan Bowling Centre.

Vikings Impress In Soccer Opener

WINNIPEG — Coach Wally Milligan's University of Victoria Vikings got off to an impressive start Friday in the Western Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Association's soccer championship by rolling to a 5-0 victory over Saskatchewan Huskies.

The WCIAA's defending champions, Vikings grabbed a 1-0 half-time lead on Russ Ball's goal, then wrapped up victory with a four-goal spree in the second session.

Keith Humphrey scored twice while Jindy Johl and Dave Swanson added singles in the second-half spurt.

BEARS TAKE TWO

Alberta's Golden Bears also impressed in opening action, rolling to a 4-1 victory over Saskatchewan and then blanking Regina 3-0.

Regina, Saskatchewan, Victoria and Calgary are bracketed in an "A" section while Calgary, Brandon, Manitoba and Winnipeg are competing in the "B" division.

Sectional winners play off Sunday for the WCIAA championship.

In Friday's other games, Calgary belted Brandon 6-0, Manitoba's Bisons shaded Winnipeg 1-0 before Winnipeg rebounded to defeat Calgary 3-1.

Two Share Lead In Proette Event

WACO, Tex. (AP) — Kathy Whitworth and Marlane Hagge led a full scale charge on par Friday in the Lake Waco women's golf classic, both firing five-under 67s.

Two strokes back at 69 was Carol Mann, apparently over the bronchial trouble that caused her to skip practice prior to the tournament.

Ten players bettered par 72. Tied at 70 were Mary Miller and Judy Rankin. At 71 were Betsy Cullin, Renee Powell, Shirley Englehorn, Sandra Spuzich, and Canada's Sandra Post.

Pilots Dismiss Pair of Coaches

NEW YORK (AP) — Seattle coaches Sal Maglie and Ron Plaza have been dismissed, Marvin Milkes, general manager of the American League's expansion Pilots announced here.

No decision has been made on Frank Crosetti, or the future of manager Joe Schultz.

Bathgate Appointed To Penticton Post

PENTICTON, B.C. (CP) — Bernie Bathgate, a member of the world-champion Penticton Vs in 1955, Friday was appointed assistant coach of Penticton Broncos of the British Columbia Junior Hockey League.

Head coach is Jack Taggart, who doubles as a scout for St. Louis Blues of the National Hockey League.

Peninsula Basketball

Saanichton's pre-midget boys clipped Brentwood 17-2 while Brentwood bantam girls defeated Cordova Bay 62-5 in the Peninsula Basketball Association's opening games Friday.

Stirring Comeback Stings Claremont

Defending champion Mount View Hornets fashioned a stirring comeback and the Inter-High School Soccer League's race for playoff berths seems ticketed for a down-to-the-wire finish.

Hornets, trailing 3-0 at the half, caught fire in the second session to shade Claremont 4-3 Friday night at Royal Athletic Park.

That result and Esquimalt Dockers' 7-0 romp over winless Belmont bunched the top four of the league's seven teams within three points of each other. Only the top two finishers advance to the city cup final.

TYEES IDLE

Victoria Tyees, idle Friday, lead with 16 points, two more than Claremont. Hornets and Esquimalt both have 13 points.

Friday's reversal was particularly damaging to Claremont's cause because the Cees have only one game remaining. Tyees, Mount View and Esquimalt each have two games to play, including a crucial Monday meeting between the Dockers and Hornets.

Claremont appeared headed for an easy triumph Friday when Dan Henry scored all three goals to provide a 3-0 half-time lead. Hornets rebounded on second-half goals by Dan Green, Leigh Hagen and two by Tom Somner.

PENALTIES HURT

Somner scored both of his goals on penalty shots, including the winner in the final minute of play.

Mike Yeager and Rick Saby each connected twice and George Hine, George Pakos and Murray Scott supplied singles as the Dockers rolled to victory over Belmont. Esquimalt led 5-0 at the half.

In Friday's only other game, Oak Bay and Mt. Douglas battled to a 3-3 draw.

Danny Lomas scored twice for the Bays to increase his league-leading goals total to 18. Gerry Spencer added Oak Bay's other counter while Mike Squires, with two, and Bill Foster replied for Mt. Doug.

Calgarian Leads In Guadalajara

GUADALAJARA, Mexico (AP) — Keith Alexander of Calgary continued in first place on the second day of the annual Guadalajara golf tournament with a total of 139 after Friday's round.

Frank O'Connor of Austin, Tex., was in second place with 142 and Leonard Thompson of Laurinburg, N.C., was in third place with 144.

UBC Throws a Block At Valkyrette Hopes

VANCOUVER — University of Victoria's Valkyrettes face an uphill climb in the Western Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Association's field hockey tournament.

Co-holders of the championship last season with UBC, Valkyrettes suffered a big setback Friday when their mainland rivals defeated Uvic 2-1 in the seven-team, round-robin tournament.

Victoria blanked Regina 3-0 on goals by Caroline Penn, Lynette Wren and Terry Neal. Miss Wren's goal and Pat Demidoff's second shutout carried Valkyrettes to a 1-0 victory over Manitoba as Victoria finished the day with a 2-1, won-lost record.

UBC, meanwhile, stepped into the lead with three straight victories, clipping Calgary 2-0 and Saskatchewan 3-2 to go along with their 2-0 triumph over Uvic.

The two-day event was to wind up today with Victoria scheduled to face Calgary, Alberta and Saskatchewan.

LEAGUE PLANS TO RESUME COURT ACTION

WINNIPEG (CP)—The Western Canada Hockey League will again press a law suit against the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association in an effort to recover draft money for the 1967-68 and 1968-69 seasons.

Ron Butlin of Calgary, president of the WCHL, made the announcement in a news release in Winnipeg.

Butlin said approximately $60,000 in draft money for WCHL teams is being held by the CAHA pending the rebel league's rejoining of the national organization. The WCHL split off in 1968 after a professional - amateur agreement between the NHL and CAHA went into effect. One of the reasons cited was the restriction of the age limit of junior hockey players.

However, in recent months, the WCHL and COHA began a series of meetings which it was hoped would resolve the dispute and establish the terms under which the WCHL would rejoin.

Bolivia Seizes Gulf Oil Holdings

LA PAZ (AP) — Gen. Alfredo Ovando Candia says his military government seized the United States-owned Gulf Oil Corp. holdings in Bolivia because his country wasn't getting enough of the profits.

In a speech Friday night, Ovando said he was not satisfied with "the large profits it (Gulf) made compared to the modest fiscal share received by the government."

Ovando presided over the secret cabinet meeting that issued an official decree announcing the seizure and nationalization Friday. The decree said a commission will be set up to determine compensation.

Police and army troops occupied the La Paz offices of the Bolivian Gulf Co., and the oil fields in Santa Cruz. The office of an Oklahoma drilling company also was reported seized. Employees were allowed to leave the properties and no incidents were reported.

"We received no warning of the takeover," a Gulf spokesman said in La Paz. "The police walked directly into the office and there was nothing we could do but leave."

Pipeline operations between Santa Cruz and the Chilean port of Arica, which move 33,000 barrels of crude oil daily for shipment to U.S. ports, were not affected.

FERRET armored scout cars sit in mothballs at main Canadian camp of the United Nations force in Cyprus. They were taken out of service as the situation between Greek and Turkish Cypriots cooled. The armored cars looked too warlike, the UN decided, for the current atmosphere on Cyprus. (CP Photo.)

BUT GUNFIRE HAS DIED ON CYPRUS

Hatreds Still Poison Life

In 1964 the United Nations intervened in the Mediterranean island of Cyprus where Greek and Turkish Cypriots were locked in a bloody communal struggle. Five years later Canadian troops still stand on guard in Cyprus where, Dave McIntosh of the Ottawa staff of The Canadian Press reports, hatreds remain. McIntosh has been on a tour of the Middle East.

By DAVE McINTOSH

NICOSIA, Cyprus — The sound of gunfire has gradually died away in Cyprus and the green-and-copper island appears at peace.

But old hatreds, mistrusts and feuds still poison life here. They are all still present, like the rusty barbed wire, the stone fortifications, the tattered sandbags, the tiresome roadblocks made of oil drums.

Still a Threat

The United Nations, which has been here in force since 1964 when Greek and Turkish Cypriots were murdering each other almost daily, is still enacting its policy of "deconfrontation."

The UN force at its outset numbered some 7,000 men, including 1,000 Canadians. Now it is down to about 3,500 men, including some 500 Canadians, and the hope is to reduce it to 2,500 in the coming months.

Scores of UN observation posts have been gradually removed. Canadian soldiers on post in the Kyrenian Mountains no longer carry sidearms. Canadian armored cars have been put in mothballs because they looked too warlike.

There has not been a serious shooting incident on the island for more than a year.

But this does not mean that either the government of President Makarios or the Turkish community is confident that blood would not run again if the UN departed.

A senior UN official said that if the Greek Cypriots ever again perpetrate an incident such as the one in 1967 in which 38 Turks were slaughtered, Turkey would invade Cyprus.

Turkey has mobilized for invasion more than once since inter-communal rioting between Greek and Turkish Cypriots broke out in December, 1963—the last time at a cost of $100,000,000. Turkey, even more than the Cypriots, wants to see the UN force continued.

There are 640,000 Cypriots, 80 per cent of them Greek and some 18 per cent Turkish. The Turks wants separation between the Turkish and Greek communities with eventual partition of the island.

Greeks Opposed

The Greeks are willing to guarantee some minority rights, but they want one administration and oppose separatism and partition.

Miltiades Christodoulou, official spokesman for the Cyprus government, said in an interview that a UN presence will be needed in Cyprus even after a political settlement is reached—if one ever is—to see that it is implemented.

Christodoulou, a chubby man of 50 with seemingly no nerves, recently survived an assassination attempt. He was hit in the shoulder by three bullets from a sub-machine-gun fired from a car.

The assassination attempt was made by an extremist group which wants Makarios to hold to his original promise to unite Cyprus with Greece.

Makarios has cooled toward enosis—union with Greece—especially since the military junta seized power in Athens.

Persons who know the black-bearded archbishop well say that Makarios still has in the back of his mind the ambition to unite Cyprus and Greece and to become the prime minister of the union.

Turkey Adamant

But it now is clear that Turkey will never allow enosis. And Turkey is a country of 33,000,000. Greece's population is 8,500,000.

Greek terrorists seeking enosis have killed one Cypriot police chief. He was murdered by a shotgun blast while he was watching a western on television in his home.

Representatives of the Greek and Turkish communities have been holding weekly talks on a political settlement but so far no solution appears in sight.

The longer a settlement eludes the two sides, the worse it will probably be for Cyprus in the long run.

Positions are hardening, and a new generation of Greeks and Turks is being brought up to hate one another.

"Education in Cyprus is miseducation," a senior UN official said.

"Time is not on the side of Cyprus," Christodoulou said in confirmation.

Run in Convoys

Meanwhile, the Canadians, along with contingents from Britain, Sweden, Ireland, Finland and Denmark, keep up their dreary rounds of peace-patrolling.

Their work is described by one UN official as "negative success," meaning no fighting between Greeks and Turks.

The UN force has even persuaded Greeks and Turks manning their fortifications to remove the magazines from their guns.

The Turks now can travel to all parts of the island, though they do not yet allow Greeks into their enclaves. It costs Canada $400,000 a year to convoy Greek vehicles 16 miles from Nicosia to Kyrenia across the main Turkish enclave.

Including time spent on half-hour or two-hour alert, UN soldiers in their blue berets—they call them no-shoot-'em hats—put in a 127-hour week.

There have been no serious incidents in the Canadian sector for the last six months, said the battalion commander, Lt.-Col. Charles H. Belzile of Montreal.

New Approach To Radio School

TORONTO (CP) — A group of radio broadcasters at Toronto's Ryerson Polytechnical Institute are taking what they believe to be a new approach to an old subject—radio education.

This fall they began broadcasting four or more educational courses on radio station CJRT-FM—a non-commercial station subsidized by Ryerson.

According to Cameron Finley, the project's senior producer, the educational series goes a step farther than previous Canadian education broadcasts.

"We're trying out an entirely new concept," he said.

Mr. Finley said that so far educational radio in Canada has been limited to programs that were little more than lecture broadcasts. But the CJRT program—called Radiostudy—is taking a more formal approach.

Students may obtain texts and course outlines to be used in conjunction with the twice-daily broadcasts, he said.

Mr. Finley said that although there is no system of examinations or credits at this time, he's hoping Radiostudy can expand to the point where it will eventually be able to give credit courses.

During the fall term Radiostudy is offering courses in biology, anthropology, musical history and human behavior.

Pickwick Club Origins Seen In Yarmouth

By NORMAN CRIBBENS

The sign over the old Bull Inn at Yarmouth—in far eastern England—conveys the extraordinary information that:

Dickens did NOT sleep here.

This perhaps is expressive of a particularly cussed brand of humor that refuses to be fazed by Big Names.

Yet most other taverns along this sea-battered coast are glad to claim Dickens' company either as guest, diner or barroom visitor.

Many believe, in fact, that the immortal Pickwick and his fatuous colleagues of the Pickwick Club had their origins in the Great Yarmouth Society of Friends, established at the Half Moon Inn in the early 1800s.

For it was at the Half Moon Inn that Charles Dickens stayed when, as a young reporter for the London Morning Chronicle, he was sent to this barren, windswept corner of East Anglia to write firsthand reports of a spirited local election.

And the records of this contest bear some resemblance to the election at Eatanswill, so hilariously described in The Pickwick Papers as a battle between the Buffs and the Blues.

"'It extended to the church itself, where there was a Buff aisle and a Blue aisle and the congregation was divided into Buff Christians and Blue Christians."

Dickens took care not to place Eatanswill in any particular county of England and hinted that the name was fictitious. He added that, like many small towns, Eatanswill imagined the eyes of "the world" were upon it.

Genial, Wine-Logged Atmosphere

While reporting at Yarmouth, it is evident he had access to the minutes of the Great Yarmouth Society of Friends, presided over by a Mr. Charles Norfor.

Unfortunately the minutes of the society, now preserved in the local archives, give no inkling as to why the society was formed, or what purpose it served, apart from good fellowship in a genial, wine-logged atmosphere.

They merely state that certain gentlemen of Great Yarmouth were to meet every Tuesday evening in the Half Moon Inn.

What did they talk about?

The minutes tell us little beyond the fact there were 14 rules of conduct (unspecified) and that five of the original 31 members were expelled for "bandying the society's affairs around the community."

What were these affairs? We can only guess, but there is evidence that birthdays and weddings were celebrated, as in our service clubs of today.

"Mr. Martin complimented The Society with a five-pint bottle of Madeira (wine) upon his embracing the connubial rites," suggesting Mr. Martin was about to be married and needed a little moral support.

Suggestive of Rotary Club

There is mention of such distinguished personalities as Mr. Walsingham, the actor; Mr. Waddy, the humorist; Mr. Glasspool, the historian, and Mr. Munday, the corn chandler, this diversity of occupations suggesting a modern Rotary Club.

And sometimes it was the very great who visited the Great Yarmouth Society of Friends, viz.

"Lord Nelson arrived this day in Yarmouth. Many members of this Society spent the evening in his company at The Wrestlers' Arms and were honored by it."

For sheer economy in reporting this could hardly be excelled, for it leaves so much to the imagination.

Not a word of what the great sailor said. Not a word about his mood or demeanor. Was he cold, indifferent or convivial? Did he stand with his backside to the fire, as slender people often do? Did he tell of his great exploits at sea, or discuss Poor Law Reform or other great issues of the day?

Did he converse with Mr. Glasspool, Mr. Norfor (Pickwick), Mr. Waddy, Mr. Munday or Mr. Walsingham?

Spirited Debate Prevailed

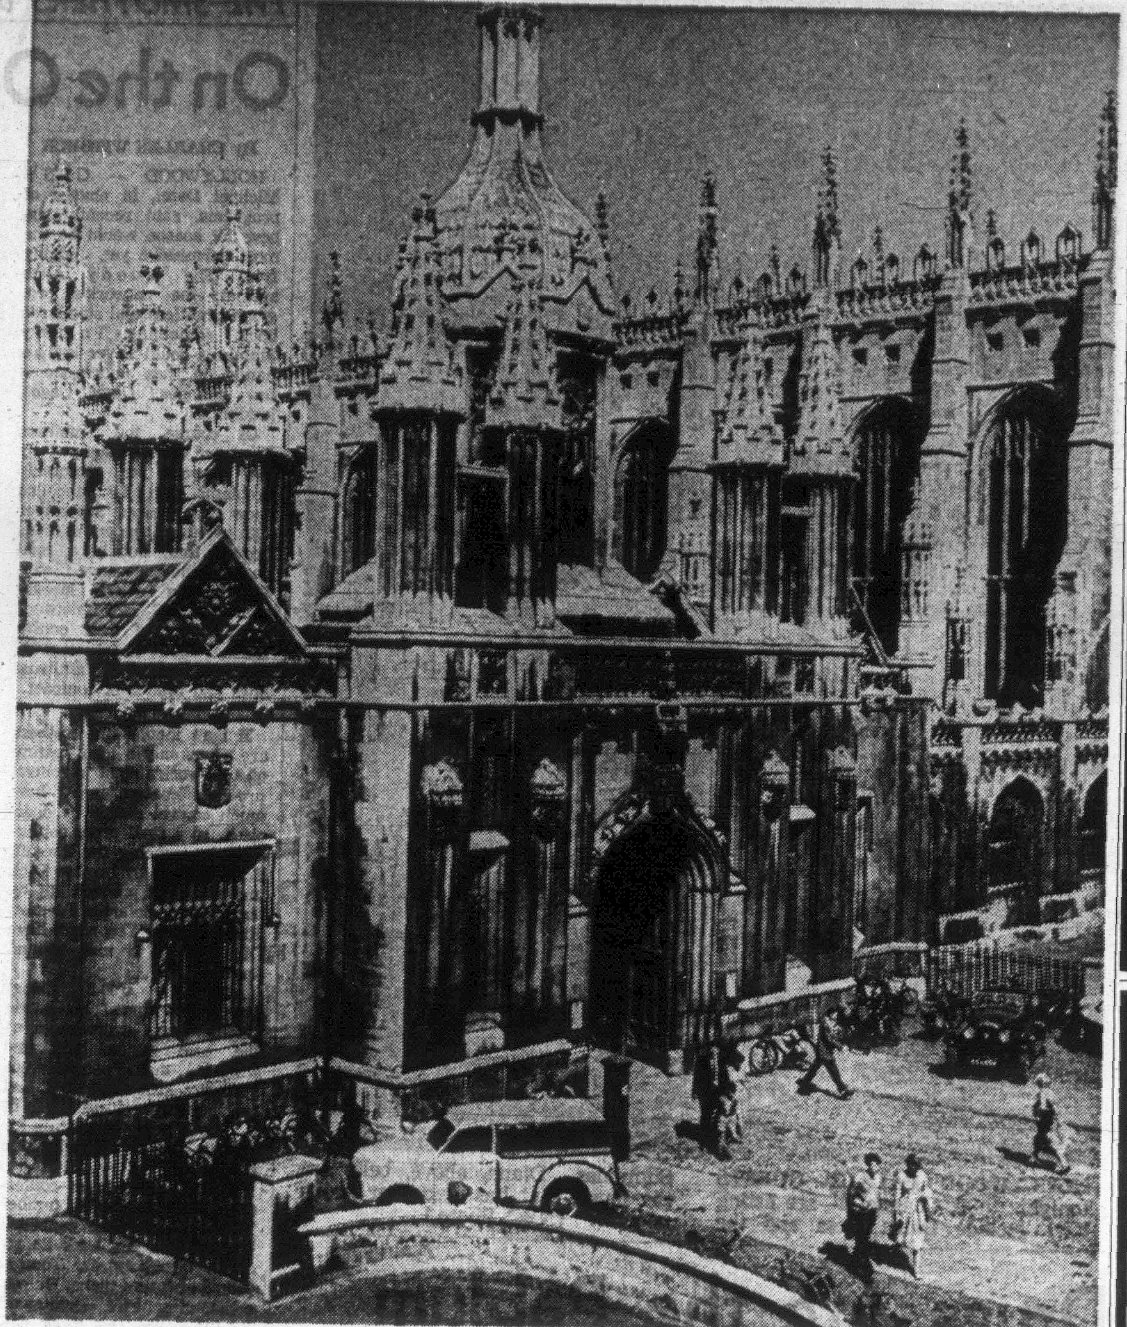
We can only surmise that England's naval hero was happy to be back in his native Norfolk, and that the faces of those gathered about him glowed in the rosy lamplight as they shared the lustre of his company.

We may surmise, too, that some of the debates engaged in by the Society of Friends were in the spirited manner of that described in the opening chapter of Pickwick Papers, viz.:

"Mr. Blotton (of Aldgate) rose to order. Did the honorable Pickwickian allude to him? (Cries of 'Order,' 'Chair,' 'Yes,' 'No,' 'Go on.')

"Mr. Pickwick said he would not put up to be put down by clamor. He had alluded to the honorable gentleman (Great excitement).

"Mr. Blotton would only say, then, that he repelled the honorable gentleman's scurrilous accusation with profound contempt. (Great cheering). The honorable gentleman was a humbug. (Immense confusion and cries of 'Chair' and 'Order.')"



KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, founded in 1440 by Henry VI and re-established three years later in conjunction with Eton College, the public school, is a major attraction for tourists in Britain today. The college chapel, above, is a famous example of Late Perpendicular architecture.

UNUSUAL STATEMENT

New Editor Plans Long Tenure

TORONTO (CP) — "I intend to work here for a long time."

Normally, that might not be a startling statement from someone just named editor of a national magazine.

But Peter Gzowski's view of his new job as a "long-range appointment" is different. He's just been made editor of Maclean's. In the last five years, professional longevity among senior editorial employees of Maclean's has not been its dominant characteristic.

Mr. Gzowski was part of a 1964 exodus of writers who quit amid charges of management interference with editorial decisions. Now he's back as a replacement for Charles Templeton, who resigned in September—again in protest of management policy.

Mr. Gzowski is keeping his own counsel on most of his plans for tackling the job and the terms under which he took it.

"The conditions under which I've accepted this job are satisfactory—more than satisfactory—to what I understand to be the fundamental, really important areas of editorial freedom and responsibility," he says.

Why did he decide to give Maclean's another try after turning his back on it once before?

GREW UP THERE

"There were a lot of things I thought about, including my own undying commitment to this magazine. It's the place I grew up. It's where I learned to be a journalist. . . . There are some things I can't express without sounding corny."

At 35, he is a shaggy-appearing, independent-minded great-grandson of a famous Polish-Canadian railway builder, Sir Casimir Gzowski.

He went to Maclean's at the age of 23 with small-town newspaper experience and became Quebec editor and managing editor before the editorial revolt in 1964. During that first tenure with Maclean's he did a number of major articles, including one on Pierre Trudeau.

After 1964, he worked for The Star Weekly, wrote books, songs, television pieces and sports columns, served as associate editor of Saturday Night, and as radio host and commentator.

Your travel agent can save you a lot more than money. Maybe even your whole vacation.

Part of the fun of a holiday is going somewhere new. But how can you plan a vacation in a place you've never seen before?

We suggest that before you spend any of your holiday money, you spend a little time with your travel agent.

It will rarely cost you a penny more and your travel agent could save your whole vacation.

And your travel agent can tell you what different hotels, resorts and restaurants have to offer. And what they charge for what they offer. Then you can choose what's right for you and your budget.

They can help you rent a car or find a guided tour that goes where you want to go. They can even advise you on which clothes to take along, where to write for a passport and a hundred other details.

We at CP Air can fly you almost anywhere in the world. And we want you to have a good time when you get where you're going.

If you're like most of us, you don't get more than one holiday a year. So before you go, talk to your CP Air travel agent. It costs nothing more to get more for your memories.

Travel with CP Air (and your travel agent) is a global affair.

WEEKEND'S TOP SHOWS

Tonight

MOVIE TO WATCH tonight is on Channel 2, at 8:10. It's the 1961 drama, Fanny, with Leslie Caron and Maurice Chevalier. Fanny is the story of a love affair between a girl and a seaman. To give her unborn child a name, Fanny marries an elderly merchant, but her seaman lover then returns. It's an excellent production.

DON MESSER'S JUBILEE is shown on Channel 12, at 8:30.

LATE-NIGHT FARE includes the 1958 war drama Some Came Running. It's an adaptation of James Jones' novel about World War Two veteran's return home. Frank Sinatra, Arthur Kennedy star.

JACKIE GLEASON SHOW. 7, Channel 8; 7:30, Channels 7, 12. "The Case of the Cuckoo Thief." Nonsense, Honeymooner style, finds Ralph and Ed acting detective, psychiatrist and fall guy in-concert tonight. When a nimble-fingered and nimble-footed shoplifter (George Chakiris) puts all his loot in Alice's bag to elude his nemesis, the shop's clerk, a series of mistaken assumptions drive Ralph and Ed to the dictionary for the meaning and cure of kleptomania. Mad, as usual, as only the Gleason-Carney team can be.

ANDY WILLIAMS SHOW. 7:30, Channel 5. Ray Charles, Cass Elliott and Don Knotts share the stage with brother Andy. Ray Charles lets go, rocking and wailing to a medley of his tunes, and joins Andy for "Games People Play." Cass Elliott sings "I Am Now;" the old-fashioned Osmond Brothers add "Aquarius" to their collection; Don Knotts has fun in the comedy portion with Andy playing improvising actors; and Prof. Irwin Corey delivers a critique. The main production number looks back on the marathon dance, and The Credence Clearwater Revival group sing their hit, "Green River."

MY THREE SONS. 8:30, Channel 7. Everybody on the show—Uncle Charlie, the boys—wants to spruce up Steve Douglas' courting dialogue in this episode, and Douglas nods, blinks, and continues to talk about lawns, cars and other essentials with lady love Barbara. This is a show for MacMurray fans who know what to expect after all these years—caution, and more caution in every romantic scene.

HOLLYWOOD PALACE. 9:30, Channel 4. Diana Ross and The Supremes take over the show assisted by Sammy Davis Jr. After numbers from The Supremes like "Where Do I Go" and "Starshine," Diana and Sammy slip into a parody of the old Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers era, beginning with "Top Hat" and closing with "They Can't Take That Away from Me." Sammy tries a few solos, and joins Diana and 7-year-old Michael Jackson for "One More Time;" Miss Ross introduces her proteges, The Jackson Five; "Laugh-In's" Alan Sues does a talk-song number; and ventriloquist Willie Lester rounds out the bill.

Sunday

SPECIAL—"HEIDI." 7, Channel 5 (repeat). Don't miss this truly special TV special if it passed you by before—it's a rare treat for young and old. The unabashedly sentimental classic children's story is given a first-rate production, and it's bolstered by the magnificence of the on-location scenes of the Swiss Alps, as well as the sumptuous settings depicting aristocratic life in Frankfort. The simple narrative about the innocent orphan Heidi, whose infectious love of life touches everyone around her, unfolds in an unhurried pace with an abundance of charm and grace. In the title role, newcomer Jennifer Edwards makes more than a satisfactory Heidi, and her supporting cast couldn't be better: Michael Redgrave as her grandfather, Maximilian Schell as her uncle, Jean Simmons a lovely governess, and Zuleika Robson, perhaps, best of all as Klara, Heidi's crippled cousin who finds courage to face life again with Heidi's help and love.

MOVIE TO WATCH Sunday evening is Stagecoach, 9 on Channel 4. It's a 1966 light western with Bing Crosby, Red Buttons, Ann-Margret and Van Heflin. Stagecoach has some great moments, most of them originating with Crosby, who steals the show as a hard-drinking frontier doctor.

TOMMY HUNTER. 7, Channels 2, 6. Selections include If I Were a Carpenter, Games People Play, and Working Man Blues. Tommy's guests are the usual group — Al Cherny, The Rhythm Pals, Debbie Lori Kaye.

CORWIN. 9, Channels 2, 6. Apples of Gold in Pictures of Silver is Canadian-produced drama. Middle-aged Sol and Hannah are overjoyed at the prospect of a child to come, but the situation is soon marred by a complication in the pregnancy. They must then make a critical decision — to let it continue or to allow Hannah to undergo the operation to save her life, which will cost the life of the unborn child. John Horton is Corwin and Alan King is Doctor James.

LATE MOVIE. 11:45, Channel 4. Arsenic and Old Lace, the 1944 film production of the famous stage comedy, has two spinster ladies caring for lonely old men in their Brooklyn home by feeding them a compound of arsenic and strychnine. Cary Grant stars.

TO ROME WITH LOVE. 7:30, Channel 7. Some touching moments are highlighted tonight when Aunt Harriet tries to take leave of the Endicott family. Kay Medford as Aunt Harriet wrings the most out of the goodbye scenes with the children, and she evokes sympathy from grownups over the language barrier in the market. In addition, an Italian admirer pays attention to Aunt Harriet, which Miss Medford makes quite plausible. (Color).

ED SULLIVAN. 8, Channel 2, 6, 7, 12. Headliners on the show include Cyd Charisse and her special dance number; Bill Dana's routine as Jose Jiminez; Spanish vocalist Rafael's songs, and numbers from the talented pop singer Lana Cantrell. Other acts include a visit from the Italian mouse Topo Gigio, comedian Joan Rivers, Don Ellis and his Band, and tricks from Tanya the elephant.

SPECIAL. 9, Channel 7. "Frank Sinatra Jr. With Family and Friends." Amid the garish noise and glitter of Las Vegas, the Sinatra family playground, young Frank stars as a vocalizing tour-guide. Sammy Davis Jr. and dancers perform around the Boulder Dam; Air Force planes go through manoeuvres over the desert landscape in scenes of beauty and precision; and Frankie does part of his nightclub act. On hand are fast-talking Jack E. Leonard, sister Nancy, and Dad, who gets up on the stage in a mellow mood and sings with his boy. The special has the feel of Vegas down pat, so if that playground appeals to you, tune in.

THE FORSYTE SAGA. 8, Channel 9. "The Pursuit of Happiness." The major conflict from which so much of the Forsyte Saga emanates and around which so much of its tragedies and disappointments stem, makes its mark in this episode. It is, of course, Soames' consuming love for Irene, the woman of all women least likely to love a man of his property-oriented life style, and its awesome precision and practicality. A vital episode for viewers of the series, and one so well performed as to be properly memorable.

MISSION: IMPOSSIBLE. 10, Channel 7, 12. Leonard Nimoy puts the icing on the concluding portion of the show about mind-destroying drugs. He took a back seat last week, but Nimoy comes on strong here as the cold, clever military lawyer in court, defending Jim Phelps, ready to destroy the Iron Curtain scientist. Court scenes arouse the most interest, while viewers will get a kick out of agile Barney, jumping over a guarded fence to climb up a watertower where he drops the immobilizing drugs. (Color). 10:00 P.M. CBS.

THE BOLD ONES. 10, Channel 5. "The Rebellion of the Body," interesting drama. This one is highly technical and absorbing, but the best thing about it is the disease involved which is so rare and specialized, even hypochrondriacs can relax. Dr. Hunter (David Hartman) accidentally receives such an excess dose of radiation that he can no longer produce enough red blood cells to live. A bone marrow transplant—still considered a possible answer for leukemia—is his only chance, and we're in on it right from the start.

Drugs Are the Pablum Of 'Star' City's Kids

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Most American parents face the possibility that their children may get hung up on dope. If the parent happens to be an entertainment star, the chances of that danger may be increased.

This was underscored recently with the apparent suicide of 20-year-old Diane Linkletter. Her father, television star Art Linkletter, a native of Moose Jaw, Sask., said she plunged six storeys to her death while under the influence of LSD.

"It wasn't suicide, because she wasn't herself," Linkletter said. "She was murdered by the people who manufacture and sell LSD."

Earlier this year, Loren Silliphant, 18-year-old son of screen writer Stirling Silliphant (In the Heat of the Night), was shot to death during a gathering in his Sunset Strip apartment by an intruder who demanded narcotics. A bag containing marijuana was found outside the window.

The Hollywood community, with its residential area centred in Beverly Hills, is similar to other centres of affluence in its juvenile problems. It has many directionless young people looking for thrills, and with the money to buy them.

Police Chief Joseph P. Kimble says: "If there is a higher incidence of dope among juveniles in Beverly Hills, it is not much higher than in similar communities. But there can be no doubt that the problem exists."

Young 'Pushers'

Where do youths get dope? "Mostly from other kids," Chief Kimble said. "The hollow-eyed, furtive, 50-year-old fiend who pushes dope on young people is pretty much a thing of the past."

There are indications that the children of the famous may be more susceptible to the use of drugs than others their age. Stars lead busy, self-centred lives that allow little time to listen to children's problems. Multiple marriages leave children to grow up with governesses and step parents and at boarding schools.

Their playground becomes the discotheques of Beverly Hills and hippieland of Sunset Strip. Many become involved with the rock music world, where pot and LSD are a way of life.

Art Linkletter touched upon this as he discussed his daughter's problems: "There was always the family name to contend with — you know how hard that can be. You're prejudged by everyone. All my kids have had to adjust to it, having that name riding on top of them."

Many Examples

Other famous children have recently made news because of drugs.

York McGavin, teen-age son of television star Darren McGavin, was indicted earlier this year on a charge of possessing and selling LSD. The youth had previously been arrested three times on marijuana charges and once was turned in by his father.

Michael Douglas, 24-year-old son of Kirk Douglas, is beginning a film career as a star in the current Hail, Hero. He admits that he went through a rebellious period while a student at the University of California at Santa Barbara.

"Sure, I used pot and LSD, and I feel that it was a worthwhile experience," he says. "It taught me about the rhythm of living."

He adds that he has given up narcotics because they dull the senses "and you need the sharp edges for acting."

Peter Fonda has unwillingly become a symbol for the turned-on generation because of his film portryals — The Wild Angels, The Trip, Easy Rider — as well as his own life. The handsome son of Henry Fonda was once arrested when police found marijuana growing at a house he rented. The charges were later dismissed.

Young Fonda makes no secret about his use of drugs. Once he said: "LSD was a catalyst. It brought me away from one point of view and gave me 1,000,000 points of view. So I can never accept one point of view any more: I can never go back home."

Recreation Vote

NANAIMO — Ratepayers in Parksville and Qualicum and nine electoral areas vote today on a proposal to form a regional recreation commission in the Nanaimo area.

If the vote is in favor, the program will be undertaken by the Nanaimo Regional District, which will propose a tax of one mill toward indoor facilities and paid leadership, and to pay for grants to recreation groups.

THE SMOTHERS BROTHERS

On the Outside, Looking In

By CHARLES WITBECK

HOLLYWOOD — CBS's Michael Dann, in charge of programs, said recently the new TV season would be the most permissive yet. Judging from The Woody Allen special, the network's program practices and standards book, something Tommy Smothers could never lay his hands on, has undergone a few changes. Dann wasn't kidding.

Of course, the Smothers Brothers weren't dumped by the network for censorship problems. Their cancelled show which aired September 10th over independent stations proved that, but in a final gesture, the boys have filed a $31 million dollar lawsuit against CBS for network infringement of their constitutional rights of free expression, violation of antitrust laws and breach of contract.

It isn't money the brothers are after, only a legal testing of a network's right to control program content, and how much control should be exercised. In a final press conference, announcing the lawsuit, Tom, flanked by brother Dick and attorneys, started out by borrowing a defeated Richard Nixon's line, "You won't have Dick and I to kick around anymore."

After the CBS firing, Tommy continued his battle holding press conferences at the turn of a hat, and admitted that "people were getting a little tired of it, and I'm getting a little tired of it." He is going to shut up for a while and go into television production.

At an earlier press conference plugging his September 10th show, the one cancelled by CBS last April for its so-called offensiveness, Tommy talked of future plans. He was considering the syndicated field because the three networks, "a tripoly" he called it, avoided him like the plague. ABC made initial talks after the firing, then became silent.

So syndication remains the only outlet, and Tommy is hesitant about entering the field because of staggered times and playdates.

He wants an up-to-the-minute show to snipe at current problems, and said he'd really like to do a talk show from San Francisco, one for "the young cats who have some hair," programs reflecting the views of the young, the dissatisfied and the black people in America.

At the lawsuit conference, Tommy made no mention of the San Francisco idea, but added he had formed a production company, Smothers Incorporated ("I made it up"), which was in the process of filming a TV racing special, "My Brother Is a Racer." The second project would be a Smothers Brothers special to run in January. Both would be made without any firm offers from networks or independent chains such as Megeomedia.

So Tommy and Dick are outside looking in, a vexing position. At a September press conference, friend Dan Rowan of "Laugh-In" agreed with the brothers' aims, but refused to go along with their methods of fighting the networks, the boys who run the candy store.

"It's their ball game," asserted Dan the realist, who freely admits getting away with a good deal on Laugh-In simply because of its high rating. "And you don't go to Washington and call executives names."

In answer Tommy felt that somebody had to be a leader and speak out, and he was willing to take the risk of being shot down. He likes to compare his position to the woman who stood up in an Alabama bus, a rather grandoise sense of reasoning.

Still, the Smothers boys can't help but feel pleased watching Woody Allen on CBS. Some of Woody's liberties allowed by the network, came out of the brother's strident war against the establishment.

NBC's Heidi Sunday Top Family Viewing

HEIDI, a two-hour special based on the Johanna Spyri classic, is to be presented Sunday evening. (See details on Page 20). In this scene Heidi, played by Jennifer Edwards, is carried up a road in the Swiss Alps by her uncle, Herr Sessemann, played by Maximilian Schell. It's a presentation worthy of note and one ideally-suited for children. It's in color and was specially produced for television audiences.

ON THE AIRWAVES

Religion Getting Short Shrift

By LESTER KINSOLVING

"The broadcast industry has never exhibited much social conscience," affirms a recent article in the prestigious America interdenominational weekly The Christian Century.

"Historically it has preferred the conventional to the controversial ... broadcasters annually give themselves awards for this or that public service. But on the whole, they leave crusading to the daily press."

The author of the Century article, public relations executive Sherwood Ross, contends that this is due in part to it being "simpler and less controversial to report events (ah, give us one more documentary on the race crisis!) than to try to change them."

He also notes that "It's easier to read a lot of church bazaar plugs than to produce a truly creative public service program" — adding that "good public service costs money."

STATIONS PROFIT

The broadcast industry is actually obtaining a considerable amount of professional religious talent — in those clergy who for evangelism's sake are glad to broadcast for no pay at all, often in violation of union contracts. In Oakland, California, for instance, Metromedia's KNEW has had Methodist minister Douglas Henderson running a 6:00 to 9:00 a.m. Sunday talk show for the past eight years — without paying him anything but travel expense from his home in San Jose.

Despite the example of Henderson, there is money in religious boradcasting. As many as 600 radio stations have profited by selling time based on the right-wing reverence for people like Carl McIntire and Billy James Hargiss.

Otherwise, the broadcast industry's "concern" for religion may be explained for the most part by a six-page statement of the U.S. Federal Communications Commission on July 27, 1960. Religious programming was designated in this statement as one of 14 "major elements usually necessary to meet the public interest, needs and desires of the community."

FILLER TIME

Since the FCC has to choose among what may be several applicants for the same frequency, stations in their original applications for a licence (or in the licence renewal every three years) generally promise to allocate some time to religious programming. In the majority of cases however, such written promises are conveniently fulfilled by assigning religious programming to a time period known as either "God's Graveyard" of "The Hangover Hour": early (very early) Sunday morning.

Any Sunday morning programming, during or after this dawn patrol, has an effect described by TV writer John Bloch as "incestuous — you're talking to yourself."

DEADLY DULL

Bloch, the writer of a number of TV shows such as "The Man From U.N.C.L.E." and "Dr. Kildare," also comments: "I don't see what would attract unchurched people to church-sponsored shows."

While he might have made an exception of some religious shows (perhaps on the basis of Milton Berle's vivid remembrance of having to compete with Bishop Sheen), most listeners will agree that a considerable amount of religious programming is so deadly dull (safe enough to please all denominational and interdenominational officials) that it may be depended upon to smash the ratings of almost any station.

Instead of trying to interest the unchurched by the obviously questionable methods of broadcasting church, Bloch suggests that the churches and synagogues "spend some time and money working with writers, producers and directors, who put content into prime time evening viewing."

Until the religious denominations are willing to do this, most of their audiences will be confined to the religious shut-ins, as their programming will continue largely confined to the Sunday morning boneyard.

CRUCIFIXION BLAME MISPLACED—ISRAELI

AP Religion Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Ancient Jewish officials sought to save Jesus from Roman execution, but He wouldn't cooperate, says a noted authority on first-century Jewish and Roman law.

That's the latest conclusion about an old, but still pondered judicial proceeding that has echoed through history.

The new and probing analysis of the case comes from Justice Haim Cohn of Israel's Supreme Court. His findings, presented in the Israeli Law Review, were republished recently in Hadassah magazine in the United States.

He maintains that the questioning of Jesus by the Jewish council, the Sanhedrin, on the night before His trial and condemnation by the Roman occupation government, was an unsuccessful effort to find grounds for saving His life.

Rather than being prompted by purely ethico-religious considerations, however, "their motives were realistic and political," he says, aimed at regaining some of their lost influence among the people.

"The standing and prestige of the high priests among the broad masses of the people were in those days steadily declining," he recounts. "They were suspected and accused of collaboration with Roman authorities. . . .

"Nothing could have been further from their intentions, or more harmful to their purpose, than to arouse the discontent and disaffection of the people by lending a hand in the execution by the Romans of one in their midst."

On the other hand, "any action on their part to prevent such execution would, if successful, have been likely to arouse popular applause and to reinstate them in the eyes of the people as their natural and legitimate leaders."

He says this is the only objective that could have caused the unusual nighttime meeting of the Sanhedrin, in view of conditions, laws and customs of that day, and it also fits basically the gospel accounts.

The meeting started with numerous witnesses being questioned and branded as "false witnesses," he notes, adding that they obviously would have been accepted as truthful if incriminating testimony had been desired.

However, he adds, the Sanhedrin "was interested in satisfying itself that any evidence that might be available against Jesus was false and inadmissible" so it could safely intercede in His behalf. "Hence it so found and so declared."

That point would have been sufficient under Jewish law for clearing Jesus of the Roman charges, the justice notes, since Jewish law prohibited any conviction except by testimony of at least two reliable witnesses.

However, under Roman law, he adds, the accused could be convicted on his own plea of guilty, even without witnesses, and to avoid this, Jesus had to be "dissuaded from pleading guilty" and "induced to co-operate."

Justice Cohn says it was for this purpose, after the Sanhedrin had discredited the witnesses, that its president, the high priest, questioned Jesus directly, asking if He was "Christ, the Son of the Blessed." Jesus replied affirmatively.

GAVE UP IN DESPAIR

That reply "caused the high priest and the Sanhedrin to give up in despair," the Israeli justice writes, since Jesus would not "bow to their authority" or give the assurances they needed to intervene in His behalf.

"They could do nothing more," he says, other than let the Roman trial run its course.

However, he says, it was not blasphemous for Jesus to call Himself "Son of the Blessed" or "Son of God," as the gospels say the high priest termed it.

It meant merely a "man chosen by God to serve Him" or a man "to whom God revealed Himself," Cohn says, and the appearance of persons making that claim was not unusual in times of stress nor was it prohibited.

As for the gospel material portraying Jewish leaders as urging Pilate to crucify Jesus, Cohn says it is full of "so many incongruities and improbabilities" that it obviously reflects a tendency of Jesus' apostles, fearing Roman reprisals, to "shift the blame from the Roman procurator, where it belonged, onto the Jews."

Cholera Claims 600

JAKARTA (Reuters) — About 600 persons have died of cholera in the Indonesian province of Djambi in south Sumatra during the last month, a health ministry spokesman said Friday.

Organist Named

New organist and choir leader at Centennial United Church is Ian Westmacott, a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto.

He served with RCAF bomber command in the Second World War and was afterwards appointed to the faculty of the Hambourg Conservatory in Toronto.

Westmacott graduated from the Royal Conservatory of Music in organ and voice in 1950 and then became interested in church, first as tenor soloist, then as organist and choir leader at Humbercrest United, Toronto; Knox Presbyterian, Agincourt, and Church of the Master United, Scarborough.

BETTER HUMAN RELATIONS AND COMMUNICATIONS
Eight Sunday Evenings, 7:25 to 9:30 p.m.
Director: H. Gordon Walker interested persons of any or no church welcome

New Public Course On Human Relations

A public course aimed at improving human relations and communications will be held in the Fellowship Hall at St. David's Anglican Church, Cordova Bay, starting Sunday at 7:25 p.m. and continuing for eight Sundays.

The course has been arranged by Rev. H. Gordon Walker, vicar of St. David's and director of human relations training for B.C. security officers in penal institutions.

"I believe there is an increasing need for warm personal relations to help bridge the gaps between persons — the gaps of age, class, race, economy and education," Walker said.

"We need to understand each other better, why we act the way we do and the principles that enable people to get along together."

The course covers human communications; interpersonal, intrapersonal and group relations; group teamwork and leadership skills; problems of loneliness, anxiety, frustration, hostility conflict and aggression.

Tension Mounts Between Church And Sisterhoods

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP)—The parish pastor insisted that the nuns wear religious habits while teaching. They refused, insisting they were free to wear regular contemporary clothing. The upshot: no classes for the time being.

The clash of positions, which occurred recently at St. Mary's Church in South Dartmouth, Mass., reflects in miniature an aura of tension developing in the United States between Roman Catholic authorities and some sisterhoods.

At issue was the extent of freedom to be allowed the communities of women in initiating new styles and methods of carrying out their work. The leeway seemed to vary from place to place, depending on the local bishop's attitude.

It may be that nuns will "have to work differently in one diocese from the way they will work in another diocese," says Rev. Edward L. Heston, an American priest who now holds a Vatican post dealing with religious orders.

"They'll have a freer hand in one place than they'll have in another place," he told the recent annual meeting in St. Louis of the Conference of Major Superiors of Women's Religious Institutes.

"That's the human element that we can't do anything about. We have to take people as they are and that includes ordinaries (bishops), too."

Bishop Supports Stand

In the South Dartmouth case, the pastor, Rt. Rev. Msgr. Arthur G. Considine, had the backing of Bishop James L. Connolly, of the Fall River, Mass., diocese, in insisting the nuns wear habits, a chancery office spokesman said.

The three nuns involved are members of the Sisters of Mercy, one of the largest orders of teachers and nurses in the American Church, with about 13,000 of them in two branches.

It and many of the more than 500 other Catholic communities of women recently have been modifying regulations to permit wider options in dress and modes of life.

The process has brought scattered incidents of conflict.

A showdown now appears in the offing over one of the most prolonged and dramatic collisions, involving the Immaculate Heart of Mary Sisters. They've been ordered by the Vatican to cease experiments and adopt uniform rules.

However, they have sent a letter replying that their innovations still are in a testing stage, that they probably cannot be properly evaluated until 1975, and "in the meantime, we will continue with no change of direction."

Provisions Are Flexible

The order's new provisions allow its members wide flexibility in devotional life, work and apparel.

Last May, following a dispute between the sisters and James Cardinal McIntyre of Los Angeles, the Vatican issued a directive, telling the order, among other things:

—To adopt a standard uniform habit, rather than to allow each sister to choose her garb according to the nature of her work.

—To return to specifically educational work, rather than the variety of activities the sisters have been undertaking.

—To establish a fixed schedule of community spiritual devotions, and to co-operate with the bishop of the diocese in which they operate.

The instructions resembled those insisted on earlier by Cardinal McIntyre, in whose diocese most of the Immaculate Heart Sisters serve and where 250 of them were removed from teaching posts in the archdiocesan schools for refusing to yield to his policies.

In challenging the Vatican's parallel demands, the order termed them discriminatory, saying many other orders were carrying out similar reforms.

The Vatican could revoke the community's canonical status if it refuses to comply.

A Catholic sociologist and columnist, Rev. Andrew M. Greeley, of Chicago, predicts that if the sisters are forced to choose between "being thrown out of the religious life or surrender to the cardinal," they will accept expulsion.

"The cardinal and the (Vatican) congregation will have 'won'," he writes, "but in the process they will have destroyed one of the best religious orders in the country and inflicted a severe blow on all other religious communities trying to struggle through the present crisis of change."

Churches To Discuss Poverty

TORONTO (CP) — Poverty in Canada will be one of four major topics to be discussed in Montreal Nov. 24-28 at the triennial assembly of the Canadian Council of Churches.

A council group which has been forming strategy to fight poverty will make a report of its findings. The assembly also will hear from government experts and others involved in anti-poverty work.

Other discussions will concern the problems between French-and English-speaking Canadians, the widening gap between the rich and poor countries in the world and the future of the church in general.

The 10 member churches have appointed 130 delegates to the assembly from across Canada. Another 40 to 50 fraternal delegates and observers also will attend, representing the Armenian Apostolic Churches, the Roman Catholic Church, the U.S. National Council of Churches, the World Council of Churches, the Canadian Bible Society, the Student Christian Movement and others.

The assembly is the decision-making body of the council, and its work of the last three years will be reviewed.

'Y Not I' 'U Not C'

LOWER HESWALL, England (UPI) — Whyte is not White.

The Whyte family lives next door to the White family, in identical bungalows painted white. The milkman, the postman and delivery man are constantly getting confused.

Now the Whytes have put up a 14-inch sign outside their door that says "Y not I."

No. 10 Downing Is a Ding-a-Ling

LONDON (UPI)—The door of No. 10 Downing Street, official residence of the prime minister, is knocked upon about 940 times a day.

Mrs. Mary Wilson, wife of the prime minister, also told a South Wales Women's Rally there are 162 rooms in the famous house but she has yet to see them all.

Spiritual Understanding Said Vital to Prayers

Scientific prayer is not "lip service" but "living service," Paul K. Wavro of Jacksonville, Fla., told a meeting in Victoria's First Church of Christ, Scientist, Friday night.

"The prayer that meets everyday needs is based on a spiritual understanding of God's unlimited power and goodness. And expectancy is an important part of prayer.

"Christ told his followers that the result of their prayers would be in proportion to their understanding and expectancy."

Wavro said effective prayer, as understood in Christian Science, is the spiritual conviction of the operation of God's law.

ST. LUKE'S ANGLICAN PARISH

Anniversary Services Planned

Sunday will mark the 109th anniversary of the founding of the Anglican parish of St. Luke on Cedar Hill Cross Road.

Right Rev. George Hills arrived in Victoria in January 1860 to become Bishop of British Columbia. On Oct. 26, 1861, he opened a school chapel on the site of the present St. Luke's Church.

St. Luke's became a self-supporting church in 1891, with Rev. M. C. Browne as its first rector.

At Sunday's anniversary service, the communion vessels brought here by Bishop Hills in 1860 will be used.

Guest preacher will be Rt. Rev. G. R. Calvert, formerly Bishop of Calgary and previously Dean of Christ Church Cathedral in Victoria.

BAHA'I LECTURE SUBJECT

Dr. Hossain Danesh, psychiatrist and lecturer in human relations and rehabilitation at Riverview Hospital, Vancouver, will speak on the Baha'i Faith at the University of Victoria, Monday at 8 p.m.

This the fourth in a series of lectures entitled Faiths Unlimited, sponsored by Victoria Council of Churches. They are held in Room 112 of the Cornett Building.

Subsequent speakers will be Bishop John Anderson of the Anglican Church; John Priestman, Society of Friends; Franklin H. Smith, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints; Edward T. Rand, Christian Science; Pastor Darren Michael, Seventh-Day Adventist; Philip Hewett, Unitarian.

Is Anybody—Anybody—Listening to School Trustees?

The Government Ignores Them . . .

. . . So Do Parents, Teachers, Students

Some observers of the crises of authority, direction and what the students call "relevance" now afflicting universities at both teaching and administrative levels believe the problems begin in the current primary and secondary schools. Times reporter Bob Mitchell covered the recent Vancouver meeting of the British Columbia School Trustees Association and saw what he feels to be some reasons for the communications problem in the school system which might be a contributing factor. This is his report:

By BOB MITCHELL

If two words could sum up the feelings of B.C. school trustees as they look ahead to education in the 1970s they would be "frustration" and "determination."

Trustees see themselves as middlemen in the education process, somewhere between the classroom and the senior officials in the department of education.

They're frustrated because the gradual trend toward innovation in the classroom could undermine their control of what is learned. They're also frustrated because the government alone decides on education policy changes, and nothing says the government has to listen to what the trustees say.

But above all, they're determined to re-affirm the concept of local autonomy which they, as elected representatives, theoretically embody.

At their 1968 annual convention the trustees passed a resolution condemning the government, mainly on the issue of the school construction freeze.

However, at this year's annual convention last week in Vancouver, anti-government feeling had subsided. Education Minister Donald Brothers appeared before the delegates fresh from a Social Credit election landslide, and announced a record year of school construction.

School boards generally are bitter over the government's school financing formula which was introduced in 1968.

Elected by ratepayers, the trustees' main responsibility is to spend taxpayers' money with discretion. But the formula says if school district operating costs exceed the amount allocated by the government, the extra funds must come out of municipal funds, subject to ratepayer approval.

The result during the 1968-69 school year was that in almost every district where a referendum was held, ratepayers rejected additional costs.

Trustees say the referendum principle violates their fiscal autonomy, and they passed a resolution to that effect in Vancouver. There was an air of futility in their action, however, for they seemed to feel the referendum principle, like the government, is here to stay.

When Brothers was asked what he thought of the trustees' opposition to the referendum principle, he replied:

"George Bernard Shaw once said growing old isn't so bad when you consider the alternatives."

To top it all off, there was pervasive doubt the annual convention serves any useful purpose other than to provide a handy poll of opinion on various issues.

That was the message in a resolution asking Brothers to study their resolutions and reply to them as soon as possible.

Up until now delegates haven't learned what the education minister thinks about their resolutions until a year after they're thrashed out on the convention floor.

Delegates at the convention couldn't be blamed if they began to experience something akin to a crisis of identity. There's an element of contradiction in the role they're being asked to play.

On the one hand education minister was asking them to work with his department to centralize education. He wanted them to help in the development of techniques of modular school construction and implementation of data processing in administrative work.

But on the other hand, instruction in the classroom is slowly undergoing decentralization, especially in the elementary schools. Indications are teachers and pupils will continue to stray farther and farther from the standardized curriculum.

B.C. School Trustees' Association president Jim Campbell defined the trustee-teacher relationship this way; trustees decide what should be taught, and teachers decide how to teach it.

The fallacy in that argument is that while trustees may control what is taught, they don't control the results. How something is taught is more important than what is taught. The medium is the message.

Thus, as teaching methods change, a revolution of learning will take place imperceptibly under the trustees' noses.

Delegates to the just-ended annual convention expressed their opposition to certain "liberal" trends by defeating resolutions calling for abolition of final exams and deletion of the requirement for religious exercises.

They even said high school students should continue to bring notes from home to justify lateness or absence.

While trustees probably won't make the final decision on those questions, the way they voted indicates for the present they want public schools to continue to use the tools of the past.

The role of school boards is essentially housekeeping. They hire the teachers, negotiate the salaries, decide when new facilities are needed, and award the contracts.

They have multi-million-dollar budgets, but their meetings usually consist of dry, routine business. They often talk of "changing the system", but their most imaginative efforts amount to merely garnishing an already completed structure.

They tend to follow rather than lead. The students discover pleasures and alarmed school boards attempt to impose checks on their youthful exuberance, lest the youngsters get led astray.

For years adolescents have rejected adult inhibitions about sex, then two years ago the Greater Victoria school board introduced experimental courses on "family life."

The students discovered drugs and the board this year produced a booklet listing the dangers of drug abuse.

A glance over the convention floor at the Bayshore Inn this week would indicate that real change in the concepts underlying this province's education system will not come from school trustees.

Ninety per cent of the delegates were over 40; some were over 60—a classic example of the generation gap between the elected officials and youngsters in the classrooms.

It's worth asking how many of them can relate to the experience of young people growing up in the 1960s and 1970s.

Some Interior delegates who took time off from the convention to go shopping or sight-seeing in Vancouver returned agape at the number of long-haired youths panhandling and loitering in the city's parks and streets.

What the trustees say and decide about education should be counterbalanced by consideration of what they have experienced and what they believe.

There are 500 school trustees in B.C., and about one-fifth of them are women. Many of them are professionals, and there are also businessmen, teachers and ex-teachers. Not a few have children in school and university.

From self-congratulatory statements made by delegates themselves, this much is clear: they generally see themselves as up-standing, God-fearing citizens sacrificing valuable time in the cause of education.

They are appalled by the fact that most parents do not express concern over their children's education, and they would like to get more community participation in education.

The overwhelming majority of them grew up in an era when the church and its accompanying morality played an important role. Since most of them are over 40, it's fair to say their most vital years were spent in the 1930s and 1940s.

They see education first as a necessity for "getting ahead" and secondly as an instrument of national prosperity. To many of them work in itself is a virtue, and a good education guarantees a good job.

Those who attended the annual convention this week appreciated the after-dinner jokes, drank socially and danced foxtrots at the Hotel Vancouver.

They are relatively ignorant of the youth sub-culture: to them rock music is incomprehensible noise and marijuana the embodiment of evil.

School trustees, perhaps are representative of adult society, but they are not very representative of the students for whom the schools ostensibly exist.

Pesticide Dumps Set Up

The B.C. government has designated depots around the province where British Columbians can dump unwanted pesticides.

Various health units, including the Greater Victoria metro board of health offices, and all provincial agriculture district offices as well as all fish and game branch offices will accept DDT and other long-lasting pesticides.

Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford said the depots are being established so that British Columbians can avoid the danger of polluting water or land while trying to dispose of unwanted pesticides.

He said persons should bring the pesticides to the depots in leakproof containers.

Shelford said many garden and household sprays contain DDT, Aldrin, Dieldrin and Heptachlor and these on no account should be disposed of by dumping into water courses or burying in soil because of their persistent effects.

He said burning them could be dangerous because of the possibility of explosive chemical combinations.

The depots will send the pesticides to the agriculture department entemology division here where chemists will determine the best method of disposal depending on contents — most likely destruction through other chemical additions, burying in lime or burning.

Both Shelford and Conservation Minister Kenneth Kiernan in the past have said B.C. will outlaw the persistent pesticides as soon as satisfactory alternatives are available on the market.

Pollution from Swamp Feared at Thetis Lake

Fear of suburban development contributing to pollution of Thetis Lake has been expressed by Ian M. Sherwin, president of I. M. Sherwin Ltd., a timber company.

In a letter to the Times, Sherwin, who says he uses the Thetis Lake Park for recreation, describes work by a bulldozer to clear stream beds running from a swamp outside the western boundary of the park to permit drainage into the lake.

The swamp lies between park land and a Phelps Development project which will eventually see some 600 houses built on about 200 acres north of the Trans-Canada Highway at Langford.

Two trails have been bulldozed and a natural stream bed cleared.

STUDY NEEDED

Sherwin says that before such operations are permitted in the Victoria-owned park, ecologists and engineers should make a careful study of the drainage situation to make sure there is no pollution hazard.

The housing developer, however, said today there is no danger. Ray Phelps, supervising work on the 200 acres, said the stream clearing will actually diminish pollution potential in the area.

The work was done in the natural drainage water course, a course which had become plugged with brush and scrub bushes, he said.

The plugged streams stopped flow from the swamp and let the water stagnate and become a possible pollution source.

ALL NATURAL

Phelps said there is no drainage from sewage in the development into the swamp—the ground water is all from natural sources.

In fact, the Phelps developers built their own sewage treatment plant when they began to open their property. Designed to serve an eventual 800 homes, the plant, according to a 1966 sewerage study, discharges its effluent into Millstream, which runs into Esquimalt Harbor—away from Thetis Lake.

City parks officials were not available today to comment on the situation, but Phelps indicated the work was proceeding with approval.

SITTER CLOCKS UNITED APPEAL

Whizzed into the Mayfair Shopping Centre parking lot aboard Victoria Jaycee's fire truck, Earl Levy was freed of his handcuffs today and sentenced to sit on a platform below the centre's outdoor clock.

He will sit there — and eat there and sleep there — until the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal reaches its $694,000 objective (it's about half way now).

Some 200 curious shoppers gathered to watch Levy as he climbed a ladder to his perch serenaded by the drums and bugles of the 1st Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles.

GOOD SAMARITAN PUNCHED IN FACE

While standing outside the police station on Fisgard Street on Friday, Salvation Army Brig. Marsland Rankin was struck in the face by a man.

The brigadier, the Army's correctional services officer here, was speaking to a woman seeking his assistance, when struck.

His hat was knocked off. The man fled, turned up a lane at the side of the police station which ends at the back of the courthouse. There he ran straight into the arms of policemen.

But Brig. Rankin refused to lay a charge.

"You know," he said afterwards, "that's the first time I've been struck in my life. I was not even struck when I was a child."

The man is believed to be an acquaintance of the woman the brigadier was helping.

Lawyers Don't Go For Tenant Group

The embryonic Lower Vancouver Island Tenants' Association has been unable to find a lawyer who will participate in Tuesday's founding meeting.

The meeting at 8 p.m. in South Park school on Douglas at Superior will include a panel.

Mayoralty candidate Ald. Robert Baird; former school board chairman Peter Bunn; Civil Liberties Association president Ross Leighton and a representative of the United Church action group will take part.

But tenants' organizer Brian Jewitt has been unsuccessful in persuading a member of the legal profession to attend.

"I've spoken to about six lawyers but they are either booked up or unsympathetic to our organization," he said.

Jewitt hopes a tenant's association can be an effective force in protecting tenants from unjustifiable rent increases and evictions.

After being evicted himself when his wife objected to a 40 per cent increase in rent, Jewitt organized a meeting Oct. 2 that attracted only 18 people.

HE HAD NO FRIENDS UNTIL THE THREADS CAME

By SUSAN MAYSE

The old man came to Victoria by bus from Manitoba—his doctor told him he couldn't survive another winter's cold, another summer's heat.

His wife died eight years ago, and there was nothing to make him want to stay on with his daughter's family. His grandchildren had heard all his stories of pioneer days a dozen times anyway.

He had no friends in Victoria—he'd just heard about the mild weather.

Far from home and with only a Canada pension check to live on, he found new problems. His room, which cost half his check, had only a single-element hot plate and he shared a bathroom with three other old persons on the same floor.

TOAST AND EGGS

Eating alone and cooking for himself only wasn't much incentive for gourmet cooking. He soon was eating toast and tea for two meals a day, and boiled eggs for the third.

When he finally came to the attention of Silver Threads counsellors he was weak, lonely, and depressed.

Restoring his health was most important—he was put on the "meals on wheels" list so he could get one solid meal every day. A public health nurse checked his condition and his room periodically.

His few dishes were washed, floors swept, and bed made by a volunteer housekeeper four times a week.

Within three weeks, a better apartment was found for him by the Silver Threads housing advisors.

Now, looking and acting 20 years younger than his 75 years, he attends the centre in Centennial Square three or four time a week.

He's learning Spanish, and has renewed an old interest in water colors—he never had time to paint before.

FAMILIAR SITUATION

His situation is a familiar one to the Silver Threads, says Catherine Horne, director of the main service.

"We get many people through this particular doldrum. Here they can make friends and develop some kind of relationship with people. We help hundreds every year who come to Victoria to retire."

All Silver Threads activities and services are shaped by the members themselves.

"It's important the old people run the place. We (staff) are here just to help them do what they want. There's got to be some organization, otherwise everybody would be doing things at the same time."

The service, with about 5,000 members who pay an annual membership fee of $2, can use the centre seven days a week.

ARTS, CRAFTS CLASSES

Membership entitles them to recreations, arts and crafts classes, financial help, transportation, and health services offered by the Silver Threads.

The service is supported by the city of Victoria and the municipalities for about one-third of its annual expenses—rent, light, heat, water—about $18,000.

Another chunk of expenses is taken care of by membership fees, bazaars, special projects, and assistance plans, federal and provincial.

The remaining costs, roughly one-third, is donated by the United Red Feather-Red Cross appeal. This year the Silver Threads will receive just over $15,000 if the appeal reaches its target.

IF YOU ARE A NEWcomer to these parts, be advised that this is Lantern Festival night, when East meets West in happy blending. The sponsor is Victoria Chinatown Lions Club, the place is Central junior secondary—you'll find it approximately where Fort meets Yates—and I think you'll enjoy this yearly event.

The Chinese lanterns themselves are well worth seeing. They hang in all sizes. Some are modern, some very old.

Whether their skins are of rice paper or oiled silk, they are exquisitely hand-painted. Among the display, you'll find great palace lanterns from an older China, built with six or eight sides and decked with lordly tassels.

The festival atmosphere is compounded of bazaar and picnic, and the stage show that climaxes the evening promises to be brilliant.

This year, mistress of ceremonies Mrs. Jack Tang tells me, some Japanese numbers will be included.

"The last International Lions convention was held in Tokyo," Mrs. Tang explains, "and we decided to make the show from what delegates and their wives saw there, and in Hong Kong."

So, along with Chinese dancers in imported costumes perfect to the last detail, festival-goers can expect geisha girls in flowery kimonas, skits that include a Japanese steam-bath scene, and, by way of contrast, the masked dance of Yin and Yang.

Those are the opposites which, in combination, bring the universe to a state of perfect harmony. So the dancer wears a double mask: pretty-girl face on one side, and man's face on the other.

The Lantern Festival, which opened this afternoon and took time out for a breather at 5:30 p.m., continues from 7 to 10 p.m. We're off to it when the dishes are washed—or more likely, before!

THE PRIME MINISTER has painted a grim word-picture to reporters of those who "pull live fish from the water with hooks dripping blood."

If we live-fish pullers weren't a kindly, tolerant and patient bunch, we might take the remark amiss.

But since we are, non-fishermen Trudeau is welcome to his views. One man's meat is another man's poison, as the saying goes, and there are those among us who would sooner ply rod or even handline than swing in a night-spot.

Although, as the PM points out, there are men who have to fish for a living, a lot of us angle simply because we like to.

And we like to not merely because the sport gives us the occasional chance to hoist a fish from its element. It's our passport to the outdoors, alone or with others of like mind.

Further, by a paradox that those outside our sport fail to understand, we entertain a strong affection for the species from which we remove our few—and too often, extremely few—specimens each year. The more skilled the angler, the stronger his views on conservation.

As for Mr. Trudeau, I could wish him hooked to a lively trout in a fast current, on a fly not much bigger than a mosquito.

The experience could change his too-harsh view in a hurry!

Ask The Times

Q. Can you tell me how long you have to bake raw walnuts? — M.L.S.

A. A well-known cooking authority says that walnuts should NEVER be baked because baking would ruin their taste. She had a walnut tree in her garden when she and her husband lived on Salt Spring Island. She prepared them by laying them on a screen (you can also use the floor of an attic) and letting them mature naturally. This takes about six to eight weeks.

Anyone wishing a question answered is invited to send the question along to the Times, addressed to "Ask the Times" Editor. Questions and answers will be published daily.

Doing The Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

Gala dresses for the coming holiday season . . .

The holidays are coming . . . as we were forcibly reminded when we breezed in to Miss Frith's the other day and saw an absolutely stunning collection of party dresses for every conceivable type of festive occasion when a woman wants to look glamorous . . . and isn't it the truth that when we know we LOOK marvellous we enjoy a party twice as much . . . not to mention being twice as interesting to others? . . . The clothes on the main floor attracted our attention first . . . and we marvelled that there could be so much oomph packed into dresses costing in the neighborhood of $30 . . . All the latest fashion features are here . . . chiffons with full see-through sleeves . . . Chiffon and lace dresses with peekaboo openings at the sides, outlined with lurex braid . . . Lurex dresses with swinging pleated skirts . . . glitter-trimmed brocades and plisses, pebble satins and lames . . . And what's more, you never find more than one or two in the same style . . . Up on the mezzanine we drooled over the "better" dresses . . . A lovely white knit with gold trim . . . A coral crepe banded with jingly coins . . . A red crochet see-through dress whose tacked-in lining can be removed if you'd like to live dangerously! . . . A gold lace with beads and sequins that's utterly glamorous . . . There's something very special about all these party dresses at . . . Miss Frith Millinery & Fashions, 1617 Douglas St., 383-7181.

An evening shirtdress has sheer, velvet-striped top . . . heavy white satin skirt, collar and cuffs.

Buttons and belts fit for a queen . . .

Do you long for boutique belts . . . buttons such as are found only on the most haute of haute couture costumes? . . . Then there's only one place to go and that's Impacts 'N' Imports . . . who are now importing . . . exclusively . . . the most gorgeous hand-made belts and buttons we've ever laid eyes on! . . . They're from Paris House, London . . . the firm which makes belts for HM the Queen . . . and right fit for a queen they are, too! . . . There's a wide yellow belt in silky-soft kid . . . Supple leather tie belts with gold or silver tubular ends . . . Others with gold bullion tassels . . . Satin or lame rouleau ties with pearl beaded ends big as golf balls . . . Satin ties with plaited ends of the same fabric . . . An elegant wide black suede belt with a giant gold metal buckle 6½ inches long . . . and what this one wouldn't do to a plain black dress! . . . Other plain leather and corfam belts with unusual buckles . . . And the thing is, if Impacts 'N' Imports haven't the color you want, they'll order it for you and your belt will be delivered air parcel post inside of three weeks! . . . This goes for the buttons too, which can be dyed for you in any color you wish . . . You simply must see these beautiful buttons . . . we haven't space to describe them but take our word for it, they're really something! . . . Impacts 'N' Imports, 8 Centennial Square, 388-7023.

Flamenco ruffles edge the skirt and jacket of a Pertegaz late-day black wool suit.

Beautiful new books for the young . . .

Today's books for children are a never-ending source of wonder and delight to us . . . and the latest arrivals at the Book Nook left us positively breathless, they're so lovely! . . . Now why couldn't there have been something like "The Pooh Cook Book" in our own childhood? We'd undoubtedly have learned to love cooking . . . instead of the reverse! . . . Anyway, this one's a honey . . . inspired by "Winnie the Pooh" and "The House at Pooh Corner" . . . a collection of over 60 recipes, each with delightful illustrations of Pooh characters and quotations from the stories . . . An ideal first cook book for little girls (and boys too!) . . . A new kind of book to delight youngsters and keep them occupied for hours is "Sally Go Around the Sun" by Edith Fowke, one of Canada's foremost authors on our country's folklore . . . Contains 300 singing games . . . piano accompaniment for 25 songs . . . all fetchingly illustrated in bright colors and printed in easy-to-read type . . . "Windigo" is a marvellous look . . . eight legends of the Ojibway Indians . . . collected by Herbert T. Schwartz inspired by the paintings of Ojibway artist Norval Morriseau . . . which appear in the book in profusion . . . A book to give wings to a child's imagination . . . Finally, there's "Celebrate the Sun" by Betty Nickerson . . . All about festivals . . . It containing 51 illustrations by young people around the world . . . A gloriously exciting book! . . . The Book Nook, 10 Centennial Square, 386-0813.

Now there's a hair color kit . . . strictly for men . . . on the U.S. market. Another manifestation of the peacock revolution!

After-five elegance . . .

We've always been able to spot a Dynasty dress from a hundred paces . . . The elegance of line . . . the perfection of detail which characterize everything which comes from Dynasty of Hong Kong . . . adds up to good fashion and good taste . . . Some very lovely Dynasty dresses for after-five wear are now on hand at Wilson's . . . and if we were you, we'd go and look them over while there is still a good choice of sizes . . . Incidentally, you'll find several beauties in the larger sizes . . . for instance, a beautiful beige and silver cocktail dress in a size 18 . . . There's a very smart black corded silk dress with long sleeves, fastened to one side with jewelled buttons . . . Another black quilted silk has cluster jet buttons on front and cuffs, and a wide self-belt with a striking buckle . . . An emerald velvet dress . . . simply cut with long sleeves . . . is highlighted with a wide belt encrusted with colored jewels . . . Some charming printed lames with just the right amount of glitter . . . and there's a stunning brown, bronze and silver dress, slightly fitted with long sleeves, side slits and tie belt . . . Loveliest of all, we think, is a black and gold costume . . . double breasted coat with jewel buttons, over a sleeveless low round-necked dress . . . It's a size 16 . . . and tagged at $185 . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

A nice way to diffuse fragrance around your house is with perfumed discs which slip over light bulbs. Heat releases the fragrance.

Cottage Craft kits exclusive to the Handloom . . .

Hand knits . . . while always popular . . . have become high style this year . . . so much so that even machine knits are trying to reproduce the handknit look . . . (without too much success, we might add) . . . Some of the smartest outfits we've seen are made with the Cottage Craft sweater yarn and handwoven skirt-length kits . . . which come from New Brunswick and are sold here at the Handloom . . . Some new ones have just arrived, and colors are lovely . . . spruce green, robin's egg blue, copper, briar rose, lilac, plum, goldenrod yellow . . . to name but a few . . . In each kit there's enough yarn for a sweater (pattern for which is included) . . . A 1¾ yd. length of 30" homespun to match . . . and a Handloom label to put the final touch on your handwork . . . Both yarn and homespun come in two different weights, which is nice because you can have either a lighter or heavier weight sweater to suit your needs . . . Also, if you're not a knitter yourself, Handloom has its own knitter who'll make your sweater in jig time . . . in any one of 800 knitting patterns contained in a fabulous new Knitting Dictionary which we also saw at Handloom last week . . . This, incidentally, is a book you simply must have if you knit at all . . . and if you don't, it will tell you how! . . . (If you've a friend who knits, this would make a very welcome small gift) . . . The Handloom, 18 Centennial Square, 384-1011.

Just heard of a new "body purse" which you wear dangling from a belt at your waist.

A Gypsy secret for shining, healthy hair . . .

We saw magic in the making at the House of Glamour last week . . . when four girl students from Oak Bay High . . . all with long, lanky, dull hair . . . had their tresses transformed into literal crowning glories . . . in considerably less time than it took our own hair to be set and dried! . . . First their hair was washed with a special organic shampoo . . . then Danny Hajnal applied an old gypsy formula he came across recently in a note book compiled by a member of his family back in 1887 . . . and which he's named "The Magic Gypsy Brew . . . After 15 or 20 minutes this was rinsed off with rain water . . . which Danny collects in wooden barrels at his ranch . . . When the girls' hair dried, results were spectacular! . . . Their long locks had become soft and silky with a lovely gloss . . . and you longed to run your hands through it . . . Danny explained that this is the way long hair should look . . . but usually doesn't due to air conditions and modern diet, which are not conducive to shining hair . . . From now on, H of G will be offering this Magic Gypsy Brew treatment which is so marvellous for long hair . . . and, naturally, short hair, too . . . It's very inexpensive, so young girls can easily afford it once a month or so . . . We're planning on trying it ourselves next week! . . . House of Glamour, 658 View St., 386-6188 and 1639 Fort St., 386-7715.

Give the rod in your closet a coat of paste wax, then polish. Hangers will slide much more easily.

Eye-catchers at Madam and Eve . . .

Left to our own devices in the Madam and Eve Shop one day last week . . . we flitted about like butterflies (?) pausing at new arrivals which caught our fancy . . . For instance, there are some crushed velvet all-weather coats which are comfy as well as rain-defying . . . forest green, dark brown and a nice cognac shade . . . And some swinging little doubleknit costumes by Jonathan Logan . . . one with navy coat fastening at the set-in belted waist with two tangerine buttons . . . and short-sleeved dress with tangerine top . . . Another in the same style is bright tangerine with black buttons and dress top . . . A second style consists of marigold coat with all-black dress, or navy coat with red dress . . . Quite inexpensive, we thought, at $60 for the complete outfit . . . We also liked the English pantsuits with long jackets and straight pants flaring at the bottom . . . One is grey with white buttons and belt, another, green with white ditto . . . Very youthful, good-looking pantsuits without any gimmicks . . . but if you want something wild, there's a real psychedelic pant outfit in an abstract print design . . . long sleeveless tunic with purple collar and tie . . . Just $35 for this at . . . Madam and Eve Shop, Trounce Alley, 383-7177.

Ankle-high, daytime boots like these are an important accessory to this year's pant-suit look.

Boots Become Bold and Elegant

By FLORENCE DE SANTIS

Boots seem here to stay for a while, so designers are getting interested in varying them more than in past seasons. They're going in two directions, seeming contradictory, but actually they often meet on common ground.

One is the bold look, generally to be seen in daytime boots. The other is the evening look, something new for evening, where boots have been less popular in past seasons.

Daytime boots come in a number of heights, from the shoe that's almost a boot to the knee-high. The thigh boot has vanished, as it proved too hot and impractical, but knee-highs have taken on the sleek look which was the chief reason, anyway, for the thigh boots.

At Battani, daytime boot-shoes are styled with pantsuit boldness in mind. Their heels are stacked, high and slanted, but always with the chunky look that gives strength to the design. Most Battani shoe boots feature wide straps with buckle closings, the buckles in antique inspired metal.

One such shoe, however, is translatable into an evening version, exactly as it is, by doing it in silver kid with a bronzed buckle. This way of turning bold to elegant is also seen in the Sandler of Boston boot collection, which uses the knee-high in both bold and elegant ways. "Pas de quatre," they appropriately call a group of four knee-highs. Two are in the bold look, with a U.S. cavalry theme for one, and a cavalier look to the other.

The cavalier boot is an interesting combination of high-tongued shoe with a boot leg, all in alligator-embossed leather. But this kind of swagger isn't the only effect possible in shoes-with-boot-legs. Sandler does two styles with a dressy look. One is a grey suede boot with a black patent strap-pump foot, while the other, in one color of polished brown, has a mocassin foot.

Still other dressy boots feature scrollwork, in contrast leather or in gilt and silver. Most elegant are boots in metallic, with the scroll-work in contrast metallic.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Upsetting Letter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Something in your column sure stirred up a hornet's nest in our family, and I'll bet it did the same in hundreds of others across the country. It was the letter from the married woman who said she had a strong physical attraction for her husband's brother, and if she didn't get him alone just once she would lose her mind.

Well, last evening my husband's brother and his wife came over for a friendly visit. The first thing the wife said was, "Did you read Dear Abby today?" I said, "Yes, wasn't it a gas?" She said, "Yeah, it sure was." Naturally the men had to see it, too, so they dragged out the paper, and here was this confession from a married woman who had the hots for her brother-in-law, who was also married. By the time they left, my sister-in-law was barely speaking to me, and if looks could kill, her husband would be dead now.

That night when we went to bed my husband acted mad, but he didn't say anything.

Will you be kind enough to write and say which town, or at least which state she's from so the rest of the world can sleep in peace. Heaven help me if you say Illinois.—Not Guilty

DEAR NOT GUILTY: You'll not need Heaven's help on this one. Illinois it wasn't.

DEAR ABBY: I was always under the impression that the bride was supposed to acknowledge the wedding gifts with a personal note, mentioning the gift, etc.

Some time ago my niece was married, and since I received an invitation to her wedding I sent what I considered a most generous gift—a month of my social security income.

There was no acknowledgment for nearly four months. Then came a printed card bearing a snapshot of the bridal couple with a commercially printed message, "With sincere appreciation for your thoughtfulness and good wishes."

Has this age become so automated that a bride sends printed appreciation for her wedding gifts? If so, I would like to be informed, then I shall know what to do with future wedding invitations. Sign me . . .—Quo Vadis

DEAR QUO: The printed thank you barely covers the obligation, but is better than no acknowledgment at all. The most gracious thank you is written individually. The only exceptions are acknowledgments which number in the many hundreds or thousands. But Eleanor Roosevelt, the greatest lady of them all, somehow managed to acknowledge every gift with a personal note.

CONFIDENTIAL TO MOTHER OF FOUR DAUGHTERS: Yes, I tell mothers to teach their daughters how to cook, iron, and keep a neat house. But I tell them also that there is something even more important in marriage. Girls should know how to cuddle a man, entertain him, listen to him, laugh with him, forgive him, and make his home a happy place to come home to. I have heard from hundreds of divorced women who whine, ". . . But I always kept a spotless home, and I was an excellent cook, and the dirty rat left me."

Spinster Tax

GUERET, France (AP) — A group of Aubusson region mayors wrote former president de Gaulle when he was in office: "Our spinsters don't want to marry men from the area because they prefer, by far, civil servants from Paris. They ought to be specially taxed, because if you know how tight they are this would quickly force them to take a husband."

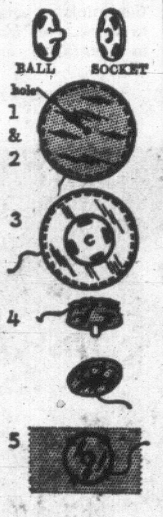
SNAPS UNDER WRAPS

From JOSET WALKER

The clue of the covered fasteners, or How to keep snaps under wraps.

Says Miss Walker, "Whenever there is the slightest possibility of a snap being exposed, such as under the front closing of a jacket which may be worn open, I subdue its metallic glint with a silken covering and thus make it appear to merge into the background fabric. Here's how you can do it."



1. For each snap, cut 2 circles of thin closely woven lining fabric, such as china silk, so that each circle is twice the diameter of the snap. (A coin is a handy guide.)

2. Run a line of hand gathering near outer edge of each circle. Pierce a tiny hole in the centre of one circle.

3. Place ball half of snap face down, centered in circle working ball of snap through pierced hole in fabric.

4. Pull up gathering thread, and fasten underneath keeping fabric snugly around snap. Tack with a stitch or two.

Cover socket half in a similar manner omitting hole in centre.

Fasten snap halves together. Ball half will depress into socket.

5. Mark for and sew separated snap halves into place on garment, working needle through side holes in snap.

Customers Air Complaints

TORONTO (CP) — G. N. Provost, president of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Co. Ltd., has chided the producers of consumer frozen goods for claims about the number of servings packages contain.

He told a meeting of the Canadian frozen food industry that he interviewed a number of customers to find out what they thought of frozen foods.

There were complaints about the accuracy of servings claimed, he said, adding that manufacturers should either change the servings they picture on the package or change the printing that says how many servings the packages contain.

Consumers also had told him that small packages of frozen vegetables come in a confusing number of sizes.

Nuisance Calls Can Be Traced

By ELIZABETH BENNETT

If that old Doris Day classic, Midnight Lace, had been set in Victoria today, there might not have been a movie.

The whole plot hinged on unhinging Doris with those nasty phone calls (so husband Rex Harrison could run off with her fortune and the Other Woman.)

B.C. Telephone could have traced them to the flat downstairs long before Rex was ready to give Doris the heave.

R. J. McLuckie, security supervisor for Vancouver and the Island, says the Vancouver telephone office receives an average 350 complaints each month about nuisance calls.

Most complaints can be handled by a service representative who is trained to soothe the injured party and suggest possible solutions.

About a third of the complaints are passed on to the security division for further investigation.

"Obscene calls are the most serious," McLuckie said. "We get between 10 and 15 each month, and average one arrest and conviction in that time.

"Making an obscene telephone call is a violation of the criminal code and the caller can be charged. We always make a report to the police but we can't always press charges.

"We must have the cooperation of the called party. She might have to testify in court and repeat what the caller said. Many are unwilling to do this."

As his statistics show, McLuckie and his satff also deal with ordinary nuisance calls. While these are not a criminal offence, they are considered a misuse of the service, and the caller, if caught, is given a stern warning.

To Catch a Caller

The problem in both cases is catching the caller.

For the past two years Vancouver and Surrey area women have been plagued by a caller who claims he is a doctor making a sex survey.

McLuckie and his staff keep his file open, but their investigations are hampered because the man picks a different victim each time.

"If there are repeated calls, say two a day, we can trace the call by using special equipment.

"When the victim gets a nuisance call she leaves the receiver off the hook. The circuit is automatically linked to the original point. There is absolutely no monitoring of the call.

"Then all she has to do is call the telephone company from a neighbor's phone and tell them she has a call on the line.

"Once we have identified the origin of the call we send a representative to interview the caller. In most cases that is all that is needed."

On obscene calls, the telephone company works closely with the police.

In one Vancouver case, the company representative and a policeman apprehended the suspect with the receiver still in his hand and his victim still on the other end.

Who makes nuisance phone calls?

Bored children account for some during school holidays. Other callers are mentally disturbed.

"The obscene caller likes to hide behind the telephone," said McLuckie.

In one case, however, the caller was caught after the victim arranged to meet him.

Many obscene callers choose their victims at random from the telephone book, and the telephone company advises women subscribers not to use Miss, Mrs. or their first names in the listings.

If you do get a nuisance call, hang up McLuckie advised. "Don't be an audience. If the caller is satisfied by your shocked response he may keep calling."

Canadian Women Still Recall Kate Aitken's Cosy Glamor

By JEAN SHARP

TORONTO (CP) — Kate Aitken says she still gets phone calls.

"You would be amazed at the calls I get. People say, 'I'm in the middle of this, and what do I do now' or 'I'm going out with my husband tonight, what is the correct thing to wear.'"

Mrs. Aitken is 78 now, retired from radio for 12 years, but her cook book and her etiquette book, two of the many products of her prolific career, are still on the newsstands. She says, in fact, they are chronically in the process of being revised.

For a lot of Canadian women, it would still seem natural to turn to Kate Aitken for advice. For more than 20 years on radio, eventually on television, in books and magazines, Kate Aitken talked to women. She talked about what she says really concerns them: their homes, their children, food and clothes. She dispensed wartime advice on making do and encouraged women to aid the war effort.

CAREER WAS CROWDED

And despite a cosy, neighborly manner, she had glamor. Her crowded career took her several times around the world—an estimated 2,000,000 miles.

Now Mrs. Aitken lives in Streetsville, a small town near Toronto. She says one of her current occupations is to help fight the threat of expropriation of her lovely home and property.

Her home shares the premises with a nursery school run by daughter Mary. Daughter Anne, who lives in London, Ont., is a teacher.

"I'm glad the girls are both profitably employed—I mean mentally."

Mrs. Aitken's husband, Henry, died in 1961.

She has nine grandchildren, five of them now in university. She says she finds them and their friends interesting company and even likes the way they dress.

"I'm not very fond of long hair for boys, but the way they're dressed now, so casually, looks nice."

WORK 'JUST GREW'

Mrs. Aitken says she is as busy as ever with her interest in the steel firm she owns, in gardening, in Women's Institute, Canadian Women's Press Club and UNICEF campaigns, and in the CBC, the Montreal newspapers and the Canadian National Exhibition. She has worked for all of the last three.

"And what I'm majoring in now is Canadian history. I started at the beginning and am working my way through. I set aside a definite period each day for my history."

She says she believes there is still a market for the kind of broadcast she did, with its blend of advice and information and personal experience. But she says there is no format to follow or advice she could offer to someone who wanted to try it.

"My program just grew. Anyone would have to work it out for herself. The main thing is that you must be interested in other people. There must be a complete lack of self-interest. You must be able to say, 'This is what I saw and this is what I think it means.'

"It has to come naturally, and evolve itself, and then it's a lot of work. The research is a lot of work."

Does she miss all the work and rush?

"I'm always happy, never unhappy. If there's a change you accept it, you don't rebel against it."

Electronic Psychiatry Helps Withdrawn Hippies

NEW YORK (UPI) — Make way for the electronic couch in psychiatry.

Dr. Harry A. Wilmer, of the University of California's San Francisco Medical Centre, calls the newest tool that—but it's really a television camera loaded with videotape.

Videotape makes possible instant replay of sporting and other events on home television.

Cameras aren't hidden. Patients are told they're on camera. There's nothing sneaky about it. During replay they see an uncontaminated view of themselves.

The technique is called self-confrontation.

Hippies from Haight Ashbury first met the electronic couch at the California Department of Mental Hygiene's Langley Porter Neuropsychiatric Institute, nine blocks from their pads.

Discussing the technique, Dr. Wilmer told Roche Medical Image and Commentary, a publication for doctors:

"When they come to us they are often withdrawn and unable to relate verbally to others. Our treatment philosophy is to allow them to do their own thing before the eyes of television.

"Confronting one's image on the television screen produces what I call self-awakedness, a sudden turning on of the self."

The monologue technique grew out of a hunch that withdrawn patients might talk more freely to a solitary camera than to a therapist.

It wasn't a bad hunch. Many let go as if they were releasing a torrent of repressed thought. However, during a monologue one hippie was practically mute, mugging and waving hands, touching face and body.

Dr. Wilmer interpreted this performance as that of a "forlorn child, bewildered and lost.' He described it as a mimicry of a child whose mother has left him.

During one experiment, the electronic couch was used to show faces a hippie reveals to therapist, detective, journalist and criminal lawyer.

With psychiatrist patient was relaxed and responsive; with detective, narrow-eyed and suspicious and flip; with journalist, a pontifical lecturer; with lawyer, a stiff-lipped answerer of questions.

TOLD OF POLICE BRUTALITY, HOSTILE HOSPITALS

Drug Commission Meets Yorkville Speed Freaks, Acid Heads

By DAVID MILLER

TORONTO (CP) — The federal drug commission went to Toronto's hippie colony Friday night and talked to pot-heads, acid-heads, needle-freaks, reformed speed freaks and lonely kids who were there because they had nowhere to go.

The five members of the commission, on the second day of their cross-Canada investigation into the non-medical use of drugs, talked with and listened to the hippies in the Yorkville coffee house district in west-central Toronto and then listened to stories from milling crowds of long-haired youths.

The members were told of police brutality, lack of interest from society in their problems and the need to make marijuana legal so the young "can do their thing."

The commission, headed by Gerald E. Le Dain, dean of Osgoode Hall law school, ran into a hostile reception when they first arrived at a village coffee-house.

One bearded youth jumped up and said no one wanted to talk because "we're all scared to speak because of the Narcs—the RCMP."

ASSURES CROWD

Mr. Le Dain assured the crowd of about 250 that the hearing was open and there would be no prosecution.

"The RCMP has assured us that these hearings will not be exploited for purposes of law enforcement. The committee has insisted upon this and the RCMP have readily agreed."

Ian Campbell, dean of arts at Sir George Williams University and a commission member, specifically asked the crowd inside and another 100 who listened outside through speakers why high school kids were using speed (amphetamines)

One youth told the commission he had just been "busted" for using speed and felt qualified to answer the question.

"We see a lot of these high school kids down here in the village. We call them weekend warriors. They use speed because kids have to be part of the gang, they don't want to be a loner.

"Speed is a power drug. It does nothing for the spirit. Grass and acid are for the spirit and they are the best. But these kids take speed because it gives them power.

"Speed gives them an out from a society geared to turn them into nice nellies and solid, hard-core producers."

The youth drew applause from the crowd when he accused Toronto police of brutality. He said he was kicked, slapped and pushed around when he was arrested.

Barry Luger, 26, head of The Trailer which helps kids in trouble over drugs, made the most impression on the commission when he said hippies and teenagers are afraid of going to a hospital for help because they know they're going to be "put through" (completely checked) by police.

"I submit to the commission that Canada needs a special social agency to work with hospitals.

"In some cases The Trailer has dealt with, kids are given the wrong medication and many doctors just look at a long-haired kid and decide immediately that he is an animal."

Before Mr. Luger spoke, a man in his mid 20s brought laughter when he symbolically burned his Ontario Health Services Insurance Plan card.

He identified himself as secretary of the People's Peasants and Poets party and said he was burning his card to protest the lack of help "speed freaks" get from hospitals.

Testimony from the hippies followed that earlier in the day from two officials of the Canadian Mental Health Association who charged that some Toronto hospitals are reluctant to treat drug users.

Dr J. D. Griffin, general manager of the CMHA, said some hospitals were antagonistic towards young drug users and often would not help them in emergency departments.

Purple Hippo Hurt By Police Raiding

MITCHELL, Ont. (CP) — Mayor Harold Cook says a "whispering campaign" caused police raids that has brought discredit to the Purple Hippopotamus, a teen-age drop-in centre operated by an Anglican priest.

Mayor Cook says the whispering came into the open Oct. 3 when police raided the rectory of Rev. Orlo Miller and the drop-in centre in a search for drugs.

Mitchell is a small farming community 12 miles northwest of Stratford.

The raid on the rectory netted two Arab water pipes, or hookahs, which the priest said had been in his possession for 15 years. They were sent to Toronto for analysis.

At the drop-in centre, police smashed the front and back doors and searched about half of the 40 young persons who had dropped in for coffee and doughnuts after a hay ride.

Only one irregularity was revealed—a youth had failed to get a change of address noted on his automobile ownership card.

Members of the centre also attribute three recent violent incidents to opposition to the centre.

The centre's former president was fined earlier this year after being found guilty on a charge of possession of marijuana.

His car was pushed into a ditch and its windows smashed when he parked it on a country road overnight while on a camping trip.

JUVENILE LAW BAD—LAWYER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Present British Columbia legislation and policies on the treatment of juvenile delinquents are making criminals out of some 15-year-olds, Roger McAffee, former juvenile court prosecutor said Friday.

"We are making criminals out of 15-year-olds because our juvenile courts are forced to transfer them to adult courts," he said. "The juvenile courts have no option because they have no facilities to deal with the serious juvenile delinquent cases."

Mr. McAffee was speaking to about 450 persons attending the B.C. Parent-Teacher Federation and Washington Congress of Parents and Teachers 38th annual conference in Vancouver.

Now practising law in North Vancouver, Mr. McAffee said that the repeal of the B.C. Training Schools' Act last April had made juvenile court ineffective. The legislation said a juvenile court judge could no longer commit a juvenile offender to the custody of either Brannon Lake home for boys or the Willingdon home for girls.

"At these particular institutions the boys or girls could be initially dealt with in a closed setting with 24-hour supervision or allowed out on occasion," he said.

"The court could say to a repeat offender: 'Look! This is the second time we've seen you here. If you come back we will have to give some consideration to sending you to Brannon Lake or to Willingdon." He added:

"The provincial government decided that instead these two training schools would become child care resources centres available to the superintendent of child welfare of the Childrens Aid Society of Vancouver.

"This had the effect of removing any threat that the court had against this person's liberty at any time."

"So you were then faced, instead of sending them to this particular institution, with fining them a maximum of $25, or giving them a suspended sentence or — our really big weapon if he was getting to be a real bad one—committing him to the custody of the Childrens' Aid Society.

"That's how the deterrent factor disappeared," he said. "It is probably also the reason there are about 36 juveniles in court every day now compared with the average 18 before the April change.

Mr. McAffee said he's afraid that society will get fed up with juvenile offenders and the backlash will mean that a few will ask for the young offenders be locked up and the key thrown away.

He also said there seems to be an increase in break-ins, "the classic juvenile offence," and an increase in violent crimes which include robberies, assaults and rapes.

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

N.S. 'Baronets' Early Settlers

By BOB BOWMAN

When Britain began to develop Canada, especially after the arrival of the United Empire Loyalists, it was the intention to create a permanent order of nobility.

It didn't go over well with the settlers in Upper Canada who were apt to joke "There's Lord Hole-in-his-Breeches getting in the hay." Titles have not been granted in Canada since 1935.

There was a precedent for the creation of nobility in Canada. In 1621 King James 1 gave his poetry tutor, William Alexander, territory for development including present-day Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Maine, and part of Quebec.

In order to induce settlers to go there he created an order called "Baronets of Nova Scotia" on Oct. 18, 1624.

Anyone who paid 150 pounds was made a baronet of Nova Scotia and given a grant of land three miles long and two miles wide.

The new settlers were supposed to "erect cities, appoint fairs, hold courts, grant lands, and coin money."

They certainly would have "coined money" if they had held on to their settlements, but only 70 actually went to Nova Scotia and had a rough time.

King Charles I later gave their lands back to France in order to get some money owed to him for marrying French princess Henrietta Maria.

The creation of the baronets of Nova Scotia led to part of Edinburgh Castle being designated as part of Nova Scotia. There was a ceremony in which a new baron would "take seizin"

This meant picking up a handful of earth as a token that he was taking possession for the king.

As this could not be done in Nova Scotia, the ceremony was held at Edinburgh Castle on the special plot of land ceded to the colony.

Other events on Oct. 18:

1646—Fathers Jogues and Lalande killed by Iroquois.

1748—Britain traded Louisburg to France for Madras, India.

1759—General Amherst at Lake Champlain heard news of Wolfe's victory at Quebec, Sept. 13.

1760—French General Levis sailed from Quebec as guest of Governor Murray.

1775—For Chambly surrendered to U.S. force invading Canada.

1878—Lord Dufferin laid foundation stone for famous terrace at Quebec City.

1917—Canadian troops relieved Australian and New Zealand troops at Passchendaele.

1929—Imperial Privy Council ruled that women could be Canadian senators.

1941—Ceiling imposed on wages and prices as wartime measure.

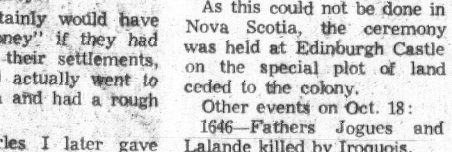
The Wonderful World of Animals



By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Butch, my beagle, is going on two years of age but has been used for breeding only twice. He is such a handsome dog that many want to use him for breeding to their females.

I don't want to wear him out, but I don't want to deprive him of any opportunities, either. How often can he be used for breeding without interfering with his health or with the quality of the matings?—V.F.

DEAR V.F.: If Butch's boudoir brigade can be introduced (singly) at 48-hour intervals, he can handle the job with appropriate enthusiasm practically indefinitely. (Or at least until old age dampens his determination and ability.)

DEAR DR. MILLER: Our children found a stray kitten and brought it home. As it turned out, it had ringworm and we had to have it put to sleep. We thoroughly disinfected, with bleach, all the areas where the kitten had been.

We would like now to get another healthy kitten and this time will have the veterinarian check it over before we allow the children to keep it. After that good disinfection of the house, would a new kitten have any chance of picking up the old ringworm?—C.Z.

DEAR C.Z.: Certainly the kitten would have some chance of becoming infected with the fungus. But to what degree this hazard exists depends on whether the previous kitten was confined to easily cleaned rooms (i.e. the kitchen) and just how effective your clean-up really was.

Whether the ringworm is microsporum canis or one of the less common fungi capable of causing ringworm in man, complete disinfection of a house is, at least, difficult.

When you consider it takes only one infected thair to start an "epidemic," it becomes apparent that a powerful vacuum cleaner is a valuable ally in the cleanup campaign.

DEAR DR. MILLER: My fish prefer their between-meal tasty tablets to their regular meals. As a result, I find lately I've just been giving them these special treats all day long and skipping most of their regular meals. Is this bad?—A.F.

DEAR A.F.: Not necessarily. If these multiple mini-meals are nutritionally sound offerings, the fish can skip their regular meals.

In fact, they should if you want to avoid a family of fat fish. (One problem you might have, if the snacks are too concentrated, is a regularity problem ranging from constipated catfish to danios with diarrhea. If the bowels do act up, better ease off on the exotic cuisine.

Beer Curfew Hits Belfast

BELFAST (Reuters) — The beer stopped flowing and everything went quiet as pubs in this riot-battered Northern Ireland capital Friday night observed a 7 p.m. drinking curfew for the first time.

There was a lot of determined drinking before the bars closed three hours earlier than usual. Some bartenders reported their customers drank as much in one or two hours as they usually do in the whole night.

But fears that pub patrons, feeling the effects of drinking with unaccustomed haste, would reel onto the street at 7 p.m. and start trouble proved to be unfounded.

"It was, very, very quiet, and if it goes off like this for the rest of the weekend, it will be very good indeed," police said today.

The drinking curfew was imposed by Robert Porter, Northern Ireland's home affairs minister, who noted that outbreaks of Protestant-Roman Catholic violence often happened after the pubs shut Friday nights, which is pay day for most workers here.

Early closing will be imposed again tonight. Sunday in Northern Ireland is always a dry day.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 60-year-old woman who stole merchandise from the Hudson's Bay store was given a suspended sentence in provincial court Friday.

Judge William Ostler noted that steps were being taken to provide Mary Archambault, 1731 Cook, with employment to enable her to augment her income.

She pleaded guilty to theft (shoplifting) under the value of $50.

Alex Mortimer, a Bay security officer, drew attention to the accused's financial plight when she first appeared in court a week ago.

He told the court that when he apprehended her she told him after paying her rent out of her $90 monthly pension cheque, she only had about 50 cents a day to spend on food.

Judge Ostler said a presentence report showed that what she had told Mortimer was substantially correct.

"The report shows that you have been a good and responsible citizen all your life," he said.

In giving the accused a suspended sentence, the judge said he was not condoning the offense.

Mary Aust, 20, 2890 Lansdowne, was found guilty by provincial Judge Edmond St. Jorre of theft over $50. She was fined $200.

She was accused of shoplifting — stealing two blouses and a two-piece pants suit from the Hudson's Bay Co. store.

The judge pointed out that when she was apprehended by the store detective she said that she had't decided whether she was going to steal the clothes or not.

"I can't overlook the fact that the clothes were in a box," said the judge.

William E. Watts, 70, 948 Latoria Road, was fined $350 for driving a car while his licence was under suspension. He pleaded guilty to the offense.

Former Teacher At North Ward Dies in U.K.

A Victoria woman, Mrs. Violet Gordon Guthrie, died while on holiday in Biggin Hill, Kent, U.K., Sept. 17, and was buried in the family plot of her husband's family in the Kentish town.

A teacher at North Ward School for several years, Mrs. Guthrie was born in Edinburgh in 1902, coming to Canada the next year with her parents, the late Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hastings.

Mrs. Guthrie was a member of Easter Star Lodge.

She is survived by her husband, Arthur J. P., 3070 Leigh Road, Langford; a brother, Ian G. Hastings of Seattle, and a sister, Mrs. N. A. (Marjorie) Harrod of Victoria.

ECM Imports Up

BRUSSELS, Belgium (Reuters) — The value of Common Market imports from countries outside the market will increase by at least 17 per cent this year to about $40,000,000,000, the community's executive commission said Friday. A monthly survey said the value of imports was 10 per cent higher in May and June than in the preceeding three months.

Plastic Bombs Rock Athens, Eight Blasts Injure Six

ATHENS (Reuters) — Eight plastic bomb blasts hit the centre of this Greek capital today, injuring six persons and disrupting traffic.

The explosions went off within minutes of each other. A power substation was damaged, bringing street cars to a standstill.

Hospital sources said the condition of the six victims was not critical. Police source described the blasts as spectacular but not serious.

Two of the bombs exploded on a street along which Premier George Papadopoulos of Greece drove 30 minutes later on his way to the airport.

Police made several arrests.

An organization calling itself the Greek Democratic Movement, which opposes the army-backed government, claimed responsibility for the blasts and said in a statement phoned to foreign news agencies: "Our aim was to disrupt communications and traffic."

A spokesman said "This was a dress rehearsal for Oct. 28, when Greece celebrates its entrance into the war in 1940."

Papadopoulos, 50, escaped an assassination attempt in August last year when a bomb narrowly missed blowing up his car on a coastal road from Sounion to Athens.

An army deserter, Alexandros Panagoulis, was convicted of the attack and sentenced to death for attempting to overthrow the government and for desertion. He escaped from prison in June but was recaptured and his death sentence was commuted.

Weddings

Van Amstel — Kaal

A double-ring ceremony was solemnized on September 27, 1969, at 7 p.m. in Victoria's Church of Our Lord, when Anne Louise, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. Kaal of Voorburg, Holland, exchanged marriage vows with Mr. John van Amstel, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. van Amstel of Rotterdam, Holland. Given in marriage by a very close friend, Mr. John Doyle, the bride was lovely in a floor-length French material classically moulded one-shoulder gown swathed in an attached toga, edged with jewelled trimming. A braided headpiece held her three-layer veil. She carried a beautiful bouquet of pheleanopsis and stephanotis with streamers hanging down. Matron of honor was Mrs. Margo Drinkwater in a brocade jumpsuit with a lace coat closed in the back. Mr. Arthur Drinkwater was best man.

Following the Dutch tradition with buggies and horses, the groom led the procession from the church to the reception at the Executive House.

Guest from Holland was the groom's aunt, Mrs. D. van Amstel, fashion designer who had made the bride's and matron-of-honor's gowns.

Dube — Cameron

A pretty autumn wedding took place at 7 p.m. October 11, 1969, at St. Patrick's Church, Victoria, B.C. Karen G. Cameron, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce W. Cameron, 2529 Foul Bay Road, Victoria, and Mr. Donald M. C. Dube, son of Mrs. G. Dube, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, and Mrs. J. Dube, Quebec City, Quebec, exchanged marriage vows in a double ring ceremony. Reverend Father Quigley officiated. The bridesmaid chosen was Miss Denise Gallop, and best man was Mr. Charles Cameron, brother of the bride. Performing ushers' duties were Mr. Bill Copeland and Mr. John Finn.

A reception followed at the Gorge Vale Golf Club.

Keillor — Trowe

A civil ceremony took place at the Parliament Buildings on September 5, 1969, at 3:30 p.m., when Frances Winifred, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Trowe, 1873 San Lorenzo Avenue, exchanged marriage vows with Mr. Kenneth Robert Keillor, son of Mrs. Ethel Keillor, Swan River, Manitoba, and the late Mr. Keillor.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. William Rose proposed the toast to the bride.

After a honeymoon to Portland, Oregon, the young couple are residing in Victoria.

8 CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank our many friends and neighbours for their kindness and sympathy, and the beautiful floral offerings during the illness and death of our beloved wife and mother, Georgina (Ena) Gaunt. Also a special thanks to Dr. R. C. Smith and Dr. N. S. Lockyer, nurses and staff of Royal Jubilee Hospital, and Reverend L. Jenner for his comforting words.
— The Family.

We wish to express our heartfelt thanks to the many friends and relatives who helped us with their kindness, sympathy and lovely flowers and cards at the time of the passing of our beloved son and brother Richard, also we thank the many doctors, including especially Drs. Le Huquet, Pazder and Patterson and the nurses and aides of the Neurological ward of the Royal Jubilee Hospital and the Bay Pavilion. Many thanks to Rev. F. W. Hayes for his comforting words.
—Doreen and Clayton Sanders.

IN APPRECIATION

Friends and relatives of the Polson Families at Saanichton: Sincere thanks is extended to one and all for the wonderful support and sympathy shown to the Polson Families. In donations of time, money and labour, by many people searching by land, sea, and air for many days for Richard D. Polson of 2269 Newman Rd., and Zale Smith of 5094 Wesley Rd., presumed drowned at Sooke, Sept. 1st, 1969, between Graham Point and Otter Point while fishing.—D. S. Polson, of 7811 Collins Road, and families.

I wish to extend my heartfelt thanks and appreciation for the acts of kindness, get well messages and flowers during her lengthy stay in the hospital and for the many messages of sympathy, donations to the Cancer Fund received from our many friends from Victoria and other cities during our sad bereavement in the loss of my dear wife, Bertha Taylor. I especially thank Dr. Gouws, the nurses and staff in Ward S2 of the Royal Jubilee Hospital, Rev. Dr. Smiley and the officers and members of Carne Rebekah Lodge IOOF.—W. Taylor.

We would like to extend our sincere thanks to the staff at the DVA Hospital for the excellent care given to our dear father, the late Barney Craddock. Also our appreciation for the kindness of Padre Kendell, McCall Bros., the pallbearers and the wonderful neighbors of our Dad and thanks to all for the many cards and lovely floral tributes received.
—George and Win Smith, Lloyd and Edna Ford and families.

9 IN MEMORIAM

BANNING — In loving memory of Raymond K. Banning, who passed away Oct. 19, 1963.

Nothing can ever take away
The love a heart holds dear.
Fond memories linger every day,
Remembrance keeps him near.

—Always remembered by Bella and family.

COOKE—William M. (Mac) passed away at Vanderhoof, B.C., Oct. 19, 1967.

The rolling stream of life rolls on,
But still the vacant chair
Recalls the love, the voice the smile,
Of the one who once sat there.

—Loving wife Nellie, Kay and Jack.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of David Moore McCall who passed away October 18, 1955 and Maybelle Mae McCall who passed away October 2, 1969.

Exclusively built for the family that desires space. Located in one of the most prestigous Oak Bay districts, near the University. A new home with an Old Country Tudor style touch. Nearly finished.
After opening the massive front door you find yourself in a warm and inviting hall. Seven easy steps take you to the tremendous 15x23 foot living room with bay window. It features recessed fireplace lights with dimmer switch. The 12x13 foot dining room will accommodate any size family. It opens up onto the gigantic sundeck, designed to use for summer meals outside in privacy while overlooking the countryside. The large kitchen has double stainless steel sink, an enormous amount of cupboard space, a fan and a desk. It also has a door leading to the sundeck for easy serving of meals outside. The large 12x16 foot master bedroom contains a full 4-piece bath and 3 full size closets. There are 2 more bedrooms on this floor, one of which would make an ideal den. Please note that there is yet another full bathroom on the main floor.
On the lower floor you will find a second large living room or study, luxuriously finished, with fireplace and dimmer switch fireplace light. There are 3 bedrooms on this floor, one of which would make an ideal 16'x16' rumpus room. The bathroom on this floor is full 4-piece. The laundry room is beautifully panelled and contains a vanity wash basin. All rooms on the lower floor have golden ozite carpet. In the large furnace room with a 160,000 BTU oil furnace there is space left for your work bench. And last but not least is the double carport at the rear that will hold 2 big cars. Want to see this house? Just phone 383-7115 anytime.

'Idle a Long Time If Offer Rejected'

HAMILTON (CP) — Striking members of the United Steelworkers of America were told Friday that they face three more months of idleness if they reject the latest offer of the Steel Company of Canada Ltd.

Ron Tipler, president of Local 1005, said in a radio interview the strike, which began Aug., 1 could continue for another three months if the offer is rejected because the company cannot afford a better offer.

The 11,500 members of the local will vote Sunday on the offer.

Mr. Tipler earlier told a stormy meeting of about 6,000 local members that the proposed contract offering a basic across-the-board increase of 75 cents an hour is the best possible one available.

When about 400 union stewards raised objections, Mr. Tipler said:

"Damn it, you have to realize this is going to take $50,000,000 out of the company."

Other members of the union negotiating team which signed a preliminary agreement with Stelco Thursday also urged the workers to accept the terms.

The proposed contract, which also covers 3,000 striking steelworkers at Stelco plants at Toronto, Montreal, Brantford and Gananoque, Ont., would bring the basic rate of $2.51 an hour to $3.38, including a six-cent cost of living bonus, by Aug. 1, 1971.

The average wage would climb to $4.05 an hour in 1971 from the present $3.12.

Acceptance of the proposed contract by Stelco workers could pave the way for a settlement at Algoma Steel Corp. in Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., where preliminary negotiations began Thursday with 6,800 members of Local 2251.

It could also change the atmosphere in negotiations involving 3,200 striking workers at Falconbridge Nickel Mines Ltd. in Sudbury, Ont., and 18,000 men striking against International Nickel Co. of Canada operations at Sudbury and Port Colborne, Ont.

Rider Booter Staying Close

(Times News Services)

Ottawa place-kicker Don Sutherin, collecting eight points in Rough Riders' 38-31 victory over Winnipeg Blue Bombers, continues to press Hamilton's Tommy-Joe Coffey in the Eastern Football Conference's individual scoring race.

Coffey, with 118 points, holds an 11-point lead over Sutherin.

In the West, Saskatchewan's Jack Abendschan holds an 18-point advantage over Calgary's Larry Robinson.

Canadian-Bred Nijinsky Wins Newmarket Race

NEWMARKET, Eng. (Reuters) — The odds-on favorite Nijinsky, owned by United States millionaire Charles Engelhard, won the Dewshurst Stakes for two-year-olds here today.

Canadian-bred Nijinsky won the $25,385 first prize by beating Recalled by three lengths. Sandal finished third in the six-horse field.

Champion British jockey Lester Piggott rode Nijinsky.

Official starting prices were 3 to 1 on Nijinsky, 100 to 7 on Recalled and 100 to 8 on Sandal.

Gym Meet Cancelled

LJUBLJANA, Yugoslavia (Reuters) — An international championships gymnastics tournament has been cancelled here because Canada, the United States, West Germany, The Netherlands and Switzerland withdrew over the organizers' decision to bar South Africa because of its racial policies.

Scout Patrol Timbuktu—Come In

Two hundred Boy Scouts of the Victoria region have taken to the air waves this weekend.

The Scouts are participating in the seventh international jamboree-on-the-air from Metchosin with short-wave radio equipment borrowed from the local civil defence agency.

With their transmitter, the Scouts are trying to contact fellow Scouts throughout the world to get addresses and later exchange souvenirs and ideas, Robert Muir, Scout regional field executive, said.

The Scouts began broadcasting Friday from their base on Sea Bluff farm and continue today and Sunday. They have received call cards from South Africa, England, Pakistan, Manilla and Mexico as well as from points in Canada and the United States.

Deputy Provincial Collector.

First Step Towards Home Taken in New Care Unit

The first steps of patients between hospital and home will be made easier—and faster—through a new unit at St. Joseph's General Hospital which began in June.

The progressive care unit—the dream-child of Sister Mary Doris, director of nursing, and headed by supervisor Mrs. Doris Shepherd—is the first of its kind in the city.

Mrs. Shepherd says that although it began in June it was really in September that the unit began to fully function. In that month, 149 patients were transferred to there from other parts of the hospital.

The main purpose of the unit is to help patients gear themselves for home life, encouraging the maximum of self-help, and providing the training which will allow them to live with their condition when they leave the hospital.

"Take a new diabetic, or a coronary case ... we teach them how best to live with a new situation, and enjoy as full a life as possible."

Mrs. Shepherd graduated from the hospital's school of nursing in 1949 and, prior to taking over the unit, spent three years on the school's teaching staff.

She describes her new appointment as combining the best of two worlds—personal contact with the patients and the chance to teach at the same time.

Also on her staff are seven registered nurses, five practical nurses and several student nurses.

CHEERY LOUNGE

To visit the unit is to be impressed with the home-like atmosphere. There's a cheery lounge where patients eat their meals, watch television, play cards or take occupational therapy.

To get the occupational therapy started, each of Mrs. Shepherd's staffers chipped in to buy materials.

There's a small kitchen where patients can brew a cup of tea or coffee, or make themselves a sandwich.

CAME BACK

To date, only one has been caught off bounds.

"She was a lady of 91 who decided to take a stroll downtown. But she came back."

The unit's facilities also include a staff classroom where lectures are given and consultations held.

"We're challenged with every age group from 17 to 92. There's both men and women, and both medical and surgical cases. This means that every one of us has to be on her toes."

Mrs. Shepherd says it took a selling program to get the medical and nursing staff of the hospital to accept the new unit's role and contribution.

"The patients must be transferred on the recommendation of their doctors, and head nurses' help is needed to assure patients that this is something that will benefit them."

BEDS AVAILABLE

One of the major contributions the new unit has given the hospital is to make available many more beds for acute care patients.

The unit has a capacity of 43 and has been steadily full for the past few weeks.

As an extension of its services the unit's staff also works with agencies like the Victorian Order of Nurses and public health nurses so that the patients' follow-up care is part of a well-planned program.

Mrs. Shepherd says that many U.S. hospitals have the same type of unit which they describe as minimal care sections.

"We don't like that terminology — it sounds negative. You have to be better than average to do a job well here. Not everyone is a teacher."

'Aid Builds Up Many Contacts'

By AB KENT

Kalmen Kaplansky has come a long way from etaoin shrdlu.

That's not a typographical error, but a way of saying the Canadian director of the International Labor Organization used to be a printer.

And those garbled letters—which invariably find their way into print—are what type setters use to fill out a line they intend to discard; a linotype man's thing.

Kaplansky has not worked at his trade for 23 years, but he still keeps membership in the International Typographical Union and he owes much to organized labor.

He is in Victoria as Canadian director of the oldest United Nations agency, one of the oldest international organizations, which began functioning before the League of Nations to which it became affiliated and flourished.

50 YEARS OLD

Now 50 years old, the ILO is the only surviving vestige of the League.

A special advisor to the ILO director-general, Kaplansky is taking part in technical session this week of the Colombo Plan conference, to which he is invited as an observer.

On Thursday he will take on an extra job on behalf of Victoria Labor Council, as guest speaker at the second in a series of labor forums set for 8 p.m. in the Union Centre, 2750 Quadra. His subject will be IDO's First Half-Century.

If he has a message for Canadians, it is to impress a feeling of responsibilty for less developed nations, if only for selfish reasons.

By helping other countries Canada may be helped toward finding its identity, Kaplansky suggested.

"I am convinced that Canada must do more for the poorer countries of the world," he said, recognizing that Ottawa had agreed to increase its commitment to the Colombo Plan

INDIFFERENCE

"It is good to see a growing national consciousness for aiding these areas. When I started in this work there was a great deal of indifference toward it. When two per cent of the gross national product was requested as Canada's contribution, it was called a king's ransom, and that was only a decade ago."

"It is in the interest of Canada to become a partner in building a better life for peoples of the world, and this is not an altogether altruistic approach. We will benefit and we will help others."

Not only good world citizenship will be demonstrated, but there will be tangible rewards like exports, expertise and contacts built up.

"To use a stock market expression, aid to developing countries can be made to spin off development at home," the director said.

OTTAWA HIS HOME

Although he is now part of an international elite, Kaplansky insists he is still Canadian—"you can't take that away from me" — and makes Ottawa his home.

Most of his early working life was spent in Montreal, where he settled as a linotype operator within a few years of coming to Canada in 1929 as a boy from his native Poland.

In 1946 he was asked to head a trade union movement drive for human rights and for 11 years this was his full-time work, taking him to all parts of Canada in the formation of human rights committees.

In 1957 he was asked to be director of international affairs for the Canadian Labor Congress and through the CLC was elected to the governing body of the ILO in Geneva, at which he remained for seven years.

APPOINTED IN 1963

Canada appointed him in 1963 as a labor delegate to the UN and at the beginning of 1969 he became full-time director of the ILO in Canada.

Kaplansky projects ILO as a unique international organization, with a budget independent of the UN, having 121 member starest with tripartite representation.

Delegates are chosen freely as representatives of labor, management and government. For example, the Canadian Labor Congress, the Congress of National Trade Unions, railway brotherhoods, the Canadian Manufacturer's Association and the Chamber of Commerce have their spokesmen, along with government appointees.

No other international body involving many governments is of tripartite nature, Kaplansky said. "This is a source of strength. We like to think the ILO has survived because of its tripartite character.

"Our concern, of course, is men—man in his working environment," and to this end ILO is involved in research and publishing such things as the International Year Book for Labor Statistics (the only volume of its kind); setting of labor standards through international conventions, model treaties now numbering 126 which influence legislation around the world; technical assistance for developing nations and securing experts to undertake foreign mission.

Blast Kills Two

AHMEDABAD, India (Reuters) — Two men were killed when an explosion lifted the roof off a house here Friday. Officials said they suspected explosives were being made in the house. Ahmedabad was the scence of fierce Hindu-Moslem clashes last month in which more than 500 persons were killed.

Trudeau Pledges Appeal Support

Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau from Ottawa pledged his support today to Canada's united community campaigns.

The prime minister said:

"We are a nation of individuals. Our country has been built by individuals. But when necessary, we have always been ready to join together to use our united strength in common purpose.

"Nowehre is this more evident than in the work of the United Appeals and Community Chests. Here is a common cause in which volunteers of all ages and backgrounds, from every town and city are joined together in support of our voluntary welfare and community services, dedicated to helping those who need help."

Trudeau's statement evoked response from others.

2,300 AGENCIES

Governor-General Roland Michener said funds for another year of service by 2,300 local, provincial and national voluntary agencies would be approximately $51 million and this was not too great for a prosperous community of 20 millions.

Opposition leader Robert Stanfield said the progress of any civilized country is measured by the welfare of its people and the nation's voluntary organizations are a vital force for ensuring prosperity for all.

The army of 300,000 volunteer workers deserve the support of all of us, New Democratic Party leader T. C. Douglas reflected.

The realization "of the extensive need for services of numerous types by those in low income groups" has increased since the last campaign, Canadian Labor Congress president Donald MacDonald noted.

Canadian Chamber of Commerce president A. S. Leach encouraged "business and community leaders to give unselfishly of their time, their abilities and their means" to ensure a successful campaign.

Opposition Criticizes Release Time

VANCOUVER (CP) — Premier Bennett's Social Credit government came under fire Friday from the leaders of British Columbia's three opposition parties for its alleged failure to release abridged public accounts until after the Aug. 27 provincial election.

NDP House leader Dave Barrett, Liberal leader Pat McGeer and Tory leader John de Wolf agreed the move was a deliberate election ploy by the government.

The abridged public accounts for the 1968-69 fiscal year, released Thursday, disclosed the government overspent by $1,300,000 its total appropriated funds for the time period.

The accounts were believed to have been ready for release in July and are usually released with the mid-year financial and economic review which the premier has in past years made public in July.

"The fact that he held back the accounts shows he was so busy electioneering that he didn't know what's going on," said Barrett.

LONG DELAY

McGeer said the accounts were completed in June and should have been released the following month.

"The delay was definitely a political election manoeuvre because the accounts would have provided the other parties with plenty of campaign material," said the Liberal leader.

De Wolf said the fact that in all previous years the accounts were released in July clearly indicates they were withheld this year for political reasons: "It was an election tactic."

PUBLIC HEARINGS
OF THE
Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical use of Drugs

10 a.m. November 1, 1969

Council Chamber
City Hall, Victoria

The Commission is gathering whatever information is available, in Canada and abroad, on the non-medical use of sedative, stimulant, tranquilizing, hallucinogenic and other psychotropic drugs or substances.

The Commission is conducting its inquiry in public and in private, and will report to the Government of Canada on:

(a) the effects of these drugs and substances.
(b) the motives behind non-medical use of these drugs and substances.
(c) the social, economic, educational and philosophical aspects of the phenomenon — particularly how widely these drugs and substances are used, social causes, age groups and communication difficulties.

The Commission will recommend measures that the Federal Government — alone or with other governments — can employ to attack problems raised by the non-medical use of these drugs and substances.

The subject of the inquiry is a complex one. The Commission therefore invites the opinions of any individual or group that will broaden understanding of all aspects of the subject.

The public is encouraged to attend these hearings and offer their views.

Those who have submitted briefs to the Commission will have opportunities to review them verbally during the hearings.

The Commission has the authority to hear testimony in private and anonymously. These arrangements should be made with Mr. James J. Moore, Executive Secretary of the Commission, during the public hearings.

Canadians Peer Into Regional Mirrors Now

Ottawa columnist Anthony Westell recently toured Canada coast-to-coast, meeting with the leaders of government and of public and political opinion, seeking to discover how Canadians feel about their nation. These are the impressions he received.

By ANTHONY WESTELL

OTTAWA—The traveller across Canada this fall in search of national themes and priorities finds instead a deep preoccupation with regional life.

The mood is of disengagement from national affairs, and the only unity is in diversity — the tolerant acceptance that other Canadians have different lifestyles.

After the Confederation crises and the national splurge of emotion and political passion that elected Pierre Elliott Trudeau, Canadians have turned inward to the problems of everyday living.

The leaders of government and of political and public opinion within the regions of the country can often cross party and philosophical lines to agree on the nature of problems and solutions. But the region next door, or across the continent, will have quite a different list of concerns.

The four Atlantic provinces concentrate their interest on forcing the pace of economic development to narrow the gap with the wealthy West — which includes Ontario when the view is from the Atlantic Coast.

The Prairies anguish about lagging wheat sales and the consequent slippage in the regional economy.

British Columbia has its back to Ottawa, as usual, and can spare only a mild interest from its consuming drive toward The Good Life, to be realized by internal development and dynamic growth toward the new Asia.

Domestic Division in Quebec

Quebec's confrontation with English Canada has been overtaken by domestic divisions, and the quiet revolution takes the current form of a struggle for power between federalists, nationalists and separatists. The French Canadians have to redetermine their own priorities before they can renew the search for accommodation with the rest of the country.

It is partly the confused situation in Quebec which permits the other provinces to concern themselves with their own problems, after years spent concentrating on the new confederation debates.

Ontario more than any other province is beginning to recognize the mixed blessings of explosive urban growth, in which material propserity is accompanied by social strains.

Federal affairs seem almost a distraction to people intimately concerned with education and its soaring costs, populations and traffic congestion, industrial pollution and new forms of government which must somehow marry large-scale services with neighborhood democracy.

Ontario's primary concern with Ottawa at present is to secure the financial resources to cope with provincial priorities.

Western Backlash Disarmed

Across the country, the concentration on regional concerns is not accompanied by any growth of local chauvinism.

If there was ever a real western backlash against recognition of the French fact in Canada, it has sunk from sight and conversation Bilingualism and biculturalism are broadly accepted, without enthusiasm but also without hostility.

Within Quebec, the struggle is partly about the treatment of the English minority and largely concerned with the practical limits within Canada of Quebec nationalism — after a period of years in which there often seemed to be no limits.

Atlantic Canadians feel that at long last the federal government is making a serious effort, through its new development policies, to bring them into the mainstream of Canadian prosperity. While rising expectations are likely before long to encourage rising disatisfaction, the regional mood for the present is comfortably optimistic.

Trudeaumania Hits Premiers

Federal-provincial relations in general are better than they have been for years. Many of the premiers speak openly of their respect for Trudeau, and talk privately of personal liking and friendship. This is as important in its way as the growth in the formal machinery of consultation and negotiations — a new level of government which will probably be officially legitimized in new or revised constitution.

None of this is satisfactory to those who think in slogans such as One Canada, or who seek some overriding purpose on which to focus and express national unity.

Nor is diversity of much assistance to Canadians concerned about preservation of sovereignty and wishing to encourage Canadian nationalism.

It is in fact very hard to identify and to put into words any common interest which unites Canadians from east to west and north to south, and which explains why they should live together in one country. It is much easier to find those interests which divide them and to make the case for regional autonomy.

U.S. Drifts Further Away

The great bond in the past has been the negative desire not to be Americans, and the felt need to stand together against the fatal attraction of the U.S. siren. But U.S. society is increasingly less attractive, and thus less of a threat to Canadian ways of life and institutions.

What remains to justify the Canadian experiment, and support a sophisticated concept of national unity, are the very qualities which, conventionally, threaten sovereignty and cohesion — relatively few people living in relatively small communities across vast distances.

Canadians have so far been spared the strains of the social melting pot, the extremes of nationalism, the dangers of trying to force every individual and region into one crude concept of unity. We are not yet seriously threatened by urban sprawl and excessive industrialization.

After weeks of travelling in every province and in the Northwest Territories, the dominant impressions are of distance and diversity, of a loose and sprawling federation which provides a convenient framework of government for peoples working out their different problems, at varying stages of development, more as friendly neighbors than as a close family.

This adds up to an attempt to build a different and, hopefully, better society in North America. It is in its own way an expression of unit and of Canadian purpose.

TRUDEAU TURNS 50, OFF TO MONTREAL

OTTAWA (CP)—Prime Minister Trudeau, by most accounts 46 when chosen leader 18 months ago, became 50 today.

His Ottawa staff had a small party for him Friday and he flew to Montreal later to be with his family and friends today.

His Zodiac horoscope, which he does not believe in, says that as a Libran, Mr. Trudeau is "deeply fond of family, religion, history, heraldry, drama; may be timid, too, and unsure" of being liked.

CANADIAN BISHOP MAKES PREDICTION

'Pope to Share Powers'

ROME (Reuters) — Bishop Alexander Carter of Sault Ste. Marie said Friday night he thinks Pope Paul is "most definitely more prepared" to share responsibility with the bishops after the first week of the current world-wide synod of Roman Catholic bishops.

Bishop Carter, president of the Canadian Bishops Conference, told a group of English and American journalists here that no one man, whatever his position, can be on top of all the problems facing the church today.

A greater and intenser sharing of responsibility between the Pope and his bishops was called for.

He described the synod as "a surgical operation to improve the circulation of the blood of Christ."

Bishop Carter added:

"The Pope needs, as a normal thing, to share the advice of his bishops. My only hope for the synod is that we set up an organism much more expressive of collegiality.

"Collegiality is a movement for unity within the church which goes right back to the parishes.

"The Pope should be informed about the condition of the church by the presidents of the bishops' national conferences—the natural men to keep him informed as he needs to be."

DESCRIBES SYNOD

Asked what, in his opinion, a ideally representative and permanent synod would be, he replied:

"One with proportional representation, that is what we want to work for—perhaps on the basis of one representative for every 25 bishops in a country. We must set up a way in which the church is more credible.

"Any dynamic society must be collegiate in action. This sharing of responsibility has got to be active."

Bishop Carter said the church's reaction to the Humanae Vitae papal encyclical, which condemned birth control, would have been better if the bishops had been consulted first.

"The way of presentation would have been better, more pastoral, closer to what we, the bishops, had to convey to the people afterwards," he said.

But he warned against exaggerated expectations from the present synod.

"This synod has limited possibilities. It is not a third Vatican council. It is heads of bishops conferences just meeting for a couple of weeks to improve relations between the Pope, the bishops and the people. We are not challenging the supremacy of the Pope."

Asked whether the Pope seemed more willing to share responsibility after the first week of the synod, he said:

"In my opinion he is most definitely more prepared to share."

Financial Patches Cure Sick Water—Temporarily

A temporary solution to water pollution in the system supplying Indians at Shell Beach, near Ladysmith, has been worked out by the band council and the Indian agent in Duncan.

A chlorinator will be installed to treat water once it has gone through the pumphouse to the water storage tank. It will cost between $1,000 and $2,000, said agent Ron Sampson.

Tests have shown that water at both Shell Beach and Kulleet Bay, two small communities on the reserve, are contaminated with coliform organisms.

A well dug two years ago near Kulleet Bay will be uncapped and pipes will be laid to send clean water to that community at a cost of $2,000.

The money is to be raised by reshuffing the current Duncan agency budget.

Sampson said the chlorinator at Shell Beach is a temporary measure, since supply from the reservoir in a dammed up creek is too small for expected growth of the community, which now has 16 houses.

He said chlorine will not get rid of the murkiness of the water, but it will kill the organisms that have caused disease, mostly among younger members of the band at both communities.

Band Chief Lawrence Harris, who lives at Shell Beach, said he expects a permanent solution will probably be worked out in the 1971 fiscal budget from the Duncan Indian agency.

That solution means digging a well for his community, plus installing a permanent system to Kulleet Bay, on the opposite side of the peninsula the reserve occupies.

A problem to be faced is the geology of the area. Much of the reserve is over sandstone, which makes finding a site for the well difficult.

As well as money from Indian Affairs, the band may have to chip in some of its capital fund. Rough estimates put the cost of the project at more than $5,000.

One o' th' problems o' th' separatists, o' course, is gettin' separated from each other.

Question is: Is this weather a bonus fer survivin' last winter's awfulness, or an advance payment fer whut we're goin' t' suffer this winter?

STUDENTS INVEST TOAD

LANCASTER, England (Reuters) — While the Queen visited the university in this North England town Friday, students held a mock investiture of a toad. Although the Queen did not see the ceremony, she may have heard the student cries of "Long live the toad" and "Long live the Queen." The toad, dressed in an apricot-colored robe, was invested as "Archduke of Lancaster."

Separatists Blast Pro-Ottawa Stand

Liberal Candidate Draws Major Attack

MONTREAL (CP)—A lawyer and economist who Friday jumped into the Quebec Liberal leadership race was hours later branded as a "pseudo-economist" and "antiquated" by the separatist Parti Quebecois.

Robert Bourassa, 36-year-old Opposition financial critic, said he backs a program to make the most of federalism while French-Canadians are in power in Ottawa.

Countering this the Parti Quebecois devoted almost the entire opening of their annual convention here to attacking "the freshest face of the old parties."

OPENING TALK

Parti Quebecois leader Rene Levesque used his opening address to criticizing Bourassa who once tried to convince Levesque not to quit the Liberal party.

The Liberal leadership candidate said the federal formula is the one which will ensure Quebecers the highest standard of living.

Levesque called Bourassa's ideas on the federalist system "antiquated."

Gilles Gregoire, vice-president of the Parti Quebecois, attacked Mr. Bourassa as "a pseudo-economist" who asks questions about economic effects of separation without answering them.

WILL SUPPLY ANSWERS

Gregoire said the answers would come from economist Jacques Parizeau, former Quebec government economic adviser who recently joined the separatist ranks.

Parizeau was given a hero's welcome at the convention, the first meeting of the Parti Quebecois since it was founded as a common separatist front one year ago.

The 39-year-old economist, a candidate for election to the party executive at the weekend convention, said he would battle against "intellectual terrorism" aimed at frightening Quebecers out of voting for the separatists.

"They have said the standard of living would drop 25 per cent because of separation. Why not 40 per cent? Or 80 per cent? They have said 1,000,000 Quebecers would leave. But why 1,000,000?"

He said he would force separatist critics to produce evidence to support such claims, carrying the debate "to a technical terrain so that people no longer launch scary accusations."

U.S. Bans Artificial Sweetener

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health Secretary Robert H. Finch ordered today that all foods and drinks containing the artificial sweetener cyclamate be removed from grocery shelves in the United States by Feb. 1 because of new evidence the substance causes cancer in animals.

Finch emphasized, however, "we have no evidence at this point that cyclamates have indeed caused cancer in humans."

Other types are not affected. He said he would not recommend that families who now have cyclamate-containing foods and drinks in their homes throw them away or stop using them at present.

Cyclamates, which Finch estimated are a $1,000,000,000 annual industry, are found mainly in diet drinks and foods. They also are contained in a wide range of non-diet foods from bacon to canned fruits and children's vitamins.

Finch said he acted after two different laboratories presented evidence this week that cyclamates in high doses produced bladder cancer in rats and mice.

The evidence was reviewed by government scientists and a panel of the National Academy of Science, which recommended the strong restrictions on cyclamates.

Finch said beginning immediately no more cyclamates will be allowed in the production of general purpose foods and beverages.

Canadians should not be excessively alarmed by the ban, Health Minister John Munro said today.

"It is quite conceivable that we will take similar action in Canada," said Munro in a telephone interview from his office in Hamilton. "We have sent a toxcologist and pathologist to Washington immediately to examine their studies.

Dockers Begin Vote On 85-Cent Package

British Columbia's 3,200 longshoremen begin voting this weekend on a contract proposal which is expected to end the 23-day dock workers' strike.

It is expected the strike will end in time to have ships loading by Wednesday night. Sixteen are now waiting at anchor off Vancouver Island ports, three of them off Victoria.

The contract was hammered out by negotiators after marathon bargaining sessions ended Friday. It is expected the striking longshoremen will ratify it and the B.C. Maritime Employers' Association is expected to do the same.

Although the terms have not been officially announced sources close to management and union negotiators said the longshoremen have won an 85-cent-an-hour hike on top of the $3.88 base rate in a two-year contract.

First stage of the increase is a 45-cent boost, retractive to Aug. 1. The union had sought 93½ cents over two years and the employers had offered 75 cents over three years.

Andy Kotowich, Canadian area president of the union, said 600 Vancouver Island strikers will meet Monday at Nanaimo. The Lower Mainland membership meets in Vancouver Sunday.

"We should have the results by Tuesday night," Kotovich said. "If we do, and we inform the employers right away, the loading of ships should get under way by Wednesday night."

Edward Strang, president of the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association, said he is satisfied with the settlement.

Federal mediator William P. Kelly of Ottawa described it as "history making."

"It will make basic changes in methods of handling ships and container cargo that will be a model for North America," he said.

In return for the money package, employers will have greater control over operation of the work force, gang sizes on ships will be reduced although there will be no layoffs of the current force.

The Greater Victoria Area's Most Dangerous Intersections—Final

This is the last of the Times series on what are probably Greater Victoria's most dangerous intersections and this one—from an average driver's point of view—looks deceptively simple. But there have been 15 accidents at the junction of the Trans-Canada Highway and Burnside this year and three people have been injured. Part of the problem is slowing from highway speed to a stop at the lights. Part is the change of speed tempo from city-street to highway speed or the reverse after making a turn. The worst time is the supper rush hour. But it can be bad any time.

Senate Questions CIA's Laos Role

By BERNARD NOSSITER

WASHINGTON (UP)—A Senate inquiry has summoned Richard Helms, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, to explain the role of the CIA in the secret war in Laos.

Helms is expected to appear next week. The investigation is being conducted behind closed doors by a foreign relations subcommittee on overseas commitments under Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.).

Three military attaches from the American embassy in Viet nam has also been brought home to testify. William Sullivan, ambassador in Laos from 1964 until this year, is scheduled to be the lead-off witnes Monday. Sullivan is now a deputy assistant secretary for East Asia.

The investigation is perhap the most delicate undertaken by the subcommittee in its examination of the consequences of global involvements. The United States and the Laotian government have never admitted publicly that Washington plays a role in the struggle.

However, American participation is believed to be extensive and on two fronts. United States B-52s are reported to be flying as many as 200 sorties a day from bases in Thailand and South Vietnam, bombing the Ho Chi Minh trail in Laos. North Vietnam sends men and supplies down this eastern route to South Vietnam.

ARMS, ADVISERS

In addition, the United States is providing arms, advisers, transportation and bombing support to the royalist-neutralist government of Laos for its war in the north against the leftist Pathet Lao and their North Vietnamese allies.

American military aid to the Laotian government has been estimated as high as $200 million a year or four times as much as the economic assistance.

The Symington committee has refused to disclose either its witness list or the line of questions that will be purued. However, it is likely that Helms will be asked about reported 300 CIA agents said to be operating in the Laotian war. Many are reported to be former Green Berets, recruited to lead Laotion units on reconnaissance missions and terrorist raids.

Soldier and supplies for the war are carried by Air America and Continental Air Serive. The two airlines are said to be CIA-operated.

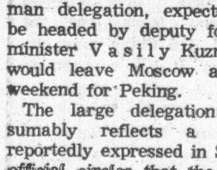
SOVIET DELEGATION TO PEKING

MOSCOW (WP) — Progress toward Sino-Soviet border talks in continuing even though the two sides may have conflicting expectations, usually reliable sources said Friday.

They predicted that a 38-man delegation, expected to be headed by deputy foreign minister Vasily Kuznetsov would leave Moscow at the weekend for Peking.

The large delegation presumably reflects a belief reportedly expressed in Soviet official circles that the talks will deal with other points at issue between the two Communist powers in addition to border tensions.



BELTONE PUTS ITS COMPUTER TO WORK TO HELP YOU HEAR BETTER WITH AN EYEGLASS HEARING AID THAT LOOKS BETTER!

The result? BELTONE'S new GRANDE, our slimmest, lightest and most efficient eyeglass hearing-aid BELTONE has ever built.

True, there have been hearing glasses before. But the GRANDE is different. So different, in fact, that you can put them side by side with many ordinary eyeglasses, and chances are you'll have trouble picking out the GRANDE at first glance. That's how STREAMLINED the temples really are!

Of course, there's more to the GRANDE than modern styling and sleek, contemporary design. A lot more . . .

. . . like "quick as a wink" conversion to reading or sunglasses.

. . . like BELTONE'S Front-focus hearability — now with minimum distortion for extra-clear hearing.

. . . like rugged "day-in, day-out" reliability with the latest version of BELTONE'S patented Micro-Module Circuit Amplifier.

. . . like long, LONG battery life — with new, long-life Mercury cells becoming available which the GRANDE was designed to use.

There are so MANY improvements, in fact, some of which would have been impossible without the help of a computer, that this is the type of aid you would expect "sometime in the 70s." But, thanks to BELTONE'S advanced engineering, YOU CAN HAVE THIS HEARING AID OF THE 70s NOW!

Frankly, I think you, yourself, will like the GRANDE — and that you will find it is a hearing aid that really looks good on you. Why not see for yourself? I'll be happy to show you the BELTONE GRANDE, either in my office or in your home. I'll also be glad to give you a FREE electronic hearing test if you haven't had one within the last year. In either case, there's absolutely NO COST OR OBLIGATION on your part.

The VW Diagnosis System.

Now when you buy a new VW you get two years' worth of regular inspections.

Absolutely free.

Using special electronic equipment a diagnostician examines just about everything that can affect your VW's health.

Engine. Electrical system. The works.

It's something like giving the whole car an X-ray.

The idea behind it all is to spot small trouble before it can become big trouble.

Which means that the Volkswagen Diagnosis System is a fancy extra that does something no other fancy extra can do.

Save you money.

With close to 300 VW dealers across Canada there has to be one close to you.

Is Anybody—Anybody—Listening to School Trustees?

Some observers of the crises of authority, direction and what the students call "relevance" now afflicting universities at both teaching and administrative levels believe the problems begin in the current primary and secondary schools. Times reporter Bob Mitchell covered the recent Vancouver meeting of the British Columbia School Trustees Association and saw what he feels to be some reasons for the communications problem in the school system which might be a contributing factor. This is his report:

By BOB MITCHELL

If two words could sum up the feelings of B.C. school trustees as they look ahead to education in the 1970s they would be "frustration" and "determination."

Trustees see themselves as middlemen in the education process, somewhere between the classroom and the senior officials in the department of education.

They're frustrated because the gradual trend toward innovation in the classroom could undermine their control of what is learned. They're also frustrated because the government alone decides on education policy changes, and nothing says the government has to listen to what the trustees say.

The Government Ignores Them . . .

But above all, they're determined to re-affirm the concept of local autonomy which they, as elected representatives, theoretically embody.

At their 1968 annual convention the trustees passed a resolution condemning the government, mainly on the issue of the school construction freeze.

However, at this year's annual convention last week in Vancouver, anti-government feeling had subsided. Education Minister Donald Brothers appeared before the delegates fresh from a Social Credit election landslide, and announced a record year of school construction.

School boards generally are bitter over the government's school financing formula which was introduced in 1968.

Elected by ratepayers, the trustees' main responsibility is to spend taxpayers' money with discretion. But the formula says if school district operating costs exceed the amount allocated by the government, the extra funds must come out of municipal funds, subject to ratepayer approval.

The result during the 1968-69 school year was that in almost every district where a referendum was held, ratepayers rejected additional costs.

Trustees say the referendum principle violates their fiscal autonomy, and they passed a resolution to that effect in Vancouver. There was an air of futility in their action, however, for they seemed to feel the referendum principle, like the government, is here to stay.

When Brothers was asked what he thought of the trustees' opposition to the referendum principle, he replied:

"George Bernard Shaw once said growing old isn't so bad when you consider the alternatives."

To top it all off, there was pervasive doubt the annual convention serves any useful purpose other than to provide a handy poll of opinion on various issues.

That was the message in a resolution asking Brothers to study their resolutions and reply to them as soon as possible.

Up until now delegates haven't learned what the education minister thinks about their resolutions until a year after they're thrashed out on the convention floor.

Delegates at the convention couldn't be blamed if they began to experience something akin to a crisis of identity. There's an element of contradiction in the role they're being asked to play.

On the one hand education minister was asking them to work with his department to centralize education. He wanted them to help in the development of techniques of modular school construction and implementation of data processing in administrative work.

But on the other hand, instruction in the classroom is slowly undergoing decentralization, especially in the elementary schools. Indications are teachers and pupils will continue to stray farther and farther from the standardized curriculum.

B.C. School Trustees' Association president Jim Campbell defined the trustee-teacher relationship this way; trustees decide what should be taught, and teachers decide how to teach it.

The fallacy in that argument is that while trustees may control what is taught, they don't control the results. How something is taught is more important than what is taught. The medium is the message.

Thus, as teaching methods change, a revolution of learning will take place imperceptibly under the trustees' noses.

Delegates to the just-ended annual convention expressed their opposition to certain "liberal" trends by defeating resolutions calling for abolition of final exams and deletion of the requirement for religious exercises.

They even said high school students should continue to bring notes from home to justify lateness or absence.

While trustees probably won't make the final decision on those questions, the way they voted indicates for the present they want public schools to continue to use the tools of the past.

The role of school boards is essentially housekeeping. They hire the teachers, negotiate the salaries, decide when new facilities are needed, and award the contracts.

They have multi-million-dollar budgets, but their meetings usually consist of dry, routine business. They often talk of "changing the system", but their most imaginative efforts amount to merely garnishing an already completed structure.

They tend to follow rather than lead. The students discover pleasures and alarmed school boards attempt to impose checks on their youthful exuberance, lest the youngsters get led astray.

For years adolescents have rejected adult inhibitions about sex, then two years ago the Greater Victoria school board introduced experimental courses on "family life."

. . . So Do Parents, Teachers, Students

The students discovered drugs and the board this year produced a booklet listing the dangers of drug abuse.

A glance over the convention floor at the Bayshore Inn this week would indicate that real change in the concepts underlying this province's education system will not come from school trustees.

Ninety per cent of the delegates were over 40; some were over 60—a classic example of the generation gap between the elected officials and youngsters in the classrooms.

It's worth asking how many of them can relate to the experience of young people growing up in the 1960s and 1970s.

Some Interior delegates who took time off from the convention to go shopping or sight-seeing in Vancouver returned agape at the number of long-haired youths panhandling and loitering in the city's parks and streets.

What the trustees say and decide about education should be counterbalanced by consideration of what they have experienced and what they believe.

There are 500 school trustees in B.C., and about one-fifth of them are women. Many of them are professionals, and there are also businessmen, teachers and ex-teachers. Not a few have children in school and university.

From self-congratulatory statements made by delegates themselves, this much is clear: they generally see themselves as up-standing, God-fearing citizens sacrificing valuable time in the cause of education.

They are appalled by the fact that most parents do not express concern over their children's education, and they would like to get more community participation in education.

of them grew up in an era when the church and its accompanying morality played an important role. Since most of them are over 40, it's fair to say their most vital years were spent in the 1930s and 1940s.

They see education first as a necessity for "getting ahead" and secondly as an instrument of national prosperity. To many of them work in itself is a virtue, and a good education guarantees a good job.

Those who attended the annual convention this week appreciated the after-dinner jokes, drank socially and danced foxtrots at the Hotel Vancouver.

They are relatively ignorant of the youth sub-culture: to them rock music is incomprehensible noise and marijuana the embodiment of evil.

School trustees, perhaps are representative of adult society, but they are not very representative of the students for whom the schools ostensibly exist.

Pesticide Dumps Set Up

The B.C. government has designated depots around the province where British Columbians can dump unwanted pesticides.

Various health units, including the Greater Victoria metro board of health offices, and all provincial agriculture district offices as well as all fish and game branch offices will accept DDT and other long-lasting pesticides.

Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford said the depots are being established so that British Columbians can avoid the danger of polluting water or land while trying to dispose of unwanted pesticides.

He said persons should bring the pesticides to the depots in leakproof containers.

Shelford said many garden and household sprays contain DDT, Aldrin, Dieldrin and Heptachlor and these on no account should be disposed of by dumping into water courses or burying in soil because of their persistent effects.

He said burning them could be dangerous because of the possibility of explosive chemical combinations.

The depots will send the pesticides to the agriculture department entemology division here where chemists will determine the best method of disposal depending on contents — most likely destruction through other chemical additions, burying in lime or burning.

Both Shelford and Conservation Minister Kenneth Kiernan in the past have said B.C. will outlaw the persistent pesticides as soon as satisfactory alternatives are available on the market.

Ask The Times

Q. Can you tell me how long you have to bake raw walnuts? — M.L.S.

A. A well-known cooking authority says that walnuts should NEVER be baked because baking would ruin their taste. She had a walnut tree in her garden when she and her husband lived on Salt Spring Island. She prepared them by laying them on a screen (you can also use the floor of an attic) and letting them mature naturally. This takes about six to eight weeks.

Anyone wishing a question answered is invited to send the question along to the Times, addressed to "Ask the Times" Editor. Questions and answers will be published daily.

HE HAD NO FRIENDS UNTIL THE THREADS CAME

By SUSAN MAYSE

The old man came to Victoria by bus from Manitoba—his doctor told him he couldn't survive another winter's cold, another summer's heat.

His wife died eight years ago, and there was nothing to make him want to stay on with his daughter's family. His grandchildren had heard all his stories of pioneer days a dozen times anyway.

He had no friends in Victoria—he'd just heard about the mild weather.

Far from home and with only a Canada pension check to live on, he found new problems. His room, which cost half his check, had only a single-element hot plate and he shared a bathroom with three other old persons on the same floor.

TOAST AND EGGS

Eating alone and cooking for himself only wasn't much incentive for gourmet cooking. He soon was eating toast and tea for two meals a day, and boiled eggs for the third.

When he finally came to the attention of Silver Threads counsellors he was weak, lonely, and depressed.

Restoring his health was most important—he was put on the "meals on wheels" list so he could get one solid meal every day. A public health nurse checked his condition and his room periodically.

His few dishes were washed, floors swept, and bed made by a volunteer housekeeper, four times a week.

Within three weeks, a better apartment was found for him by the Silver Threads housing advisors.

Now, looking and acting 20 years younger than his 75 years, he attends the centre in Centennial Square three or four time a week.

He's learning Spanish, and has renewed an old interest in water colors—he never had time to paint before.

FAMILIAR SITUATION

His situation is a familiar one to the Silver Threads, says Catherine Horne, director of the main service.

"We get many people through this particular doldrum. Here they can make friends and develop some kind of relationship with people. We help hundreds every year who come to Victoria to retire."

All Silver Threads activities and services are shaped by the members themselves.

"It's important the old people run the place. We (staff) are here just to help them do what they want. There's got to be some organization, otherwise everybody would be doing things at the same time."

The service, with about 5,000 members who pay an annual membership fee of $2, can use the centre seven days a week.

ARTS, CRAFTS CLASSES

Membership entitles them to recreations, arts and crafts classes, financial help, transportation, and health services offered by the Silver Threads.

The service is supported by the city of Victoria and the municipalities for about one-third of its annual expenses—rent, light, heat, water—about $18,000.

Another chunk of expenses is taken care of by membership fees, bazaars, special projects, and assistance plans, federal and provincial.

The remaining costs, roughly one-third, is donated by the United Red Feather-Red Cross appeal. This year the Silver Threads will receive just over $15,000 if the appeal reaches its target.

Pollution from Swamp Feared at Thetis Lake

Fear of suburban development contributing to pollution of Thetis Lake has been expressed by Ian M. Sherwin, president of I. M. Sherwin Ltd., a timber company.

In a letter to the Times, Sherwin, who says he uses the Thetis Lake Park for recreation, describes work by a bulldozer to clear stream beds running from a swamp outside the western boundary of the park to permit drainage into the lake.

The swamp lies between park land and a Phelps Development project which will eventually see some 600 houses built on about 200 acres north of the Trans-Canada Highway at Langford.

Two trails have been bulldozed and a natural stream bed cleared.

STUDY NEEDED

Sherwin says that before such operations are permitted in the Victoria-owned park, ecologists and engineers should make a careful study of the drainage situation to make sure there is no pollution hazard.

The housing developer, however, said today there is no danger. Ray Phelps, supervising work on the 200 acres, said the stream clearing will actually diminish pollution potential in the area.

The work was done in the natural drainage water course, a course which had become plugged with brush and scrub bushes, he said.

The plugged streams stopped flow from the swamp and let the water stagnate and become a possible pollution source.

ALL NATURAL

Phelps said there is no drainage from sewage in the development into the swamp—the ground water is all from natural sources.

In fact, the Phelps developers built their own sewage treatment plant when they began to open their property. Designed to serve an eventual 800 homes, the plant, according to a 1966 sewerage study, discharges its effluent into Millstream, which runs into Esquimalt Harbor—away from Thetis Lake.

City parks officials were not available today to comment on the situation, but Phelps indicated the work was proceeding with approval.

SITTER CLOCKS UNITED APPEAL

Whizzed into the Mayfair Shopping Centre parking lot aboard Victoria Jaycee's fire truck, Earl Levy was freed of his handcuffs today and sentenced to sit on a platform below the centre's outdoor clock.

He will sit there — and eat there and sleep there — until the United Red Feather-Red Cross Appeal reaches its $694,000 objective (it's about half way now).

Some 200 curious shoppers gathered to watch Levy as he climbed a ladder to his perch serenaded by the drums and bugles of the 1st Battalion, Queen's Own Rifles.

GOOD SAMARITAN PUNCHED IN FACE

While standing outside the police station on Fisgard Street on Friday, Salvation Army Brig. Marsland Rankin was struck in the face by a man.

The brigadier, the Army's correctional services officer here, was speaking to a woman seeking his assistance, when struck.

His hat was knocked off. The man fled, turned up a lane at the side of the police station which ends at the back of the courthouse. There he ran straight into the arms of policemen.

But Brig. Rankin refused to lay a charge.

"You know," he said afterwards, "that's the first time I've been struck in my life. I was not even struck when I was a child."

The man is believed to be an acquaintance of the woman the brigadier was helping.

Lawyers Don't Go For Tenant Group

The embryonic Lower Vancouver Island Tenants' Association has been unable to find a lawyer who will participate in Tuesday's founding meeting.

The meeting at 8 p.m. in South Park school on Douglas at Superior will include a panel.

Mayoralty candidate Ald. Robert Baird; former school board chairman Peter Bunn; Civil Liberties Association president Ross Leighton and a representative of the United Church action group will take part.

But tenants' organizer Brian Jewitt has been unsuccessful in persuading a member of the legal profession to attend.

"I've spoken to about six lawyers but they are either booked up or unsympathetic to our organization," he said.

Jewitt hopes a tenant's association can be an effective force in protecting tenants from unjustifiable rent increases and evictions.

After being evicted himself when his wife objected to a 40 per cent increase in rent, Jewitt organized a meeting Oct. 2 that attracted only 18 people.

IF YOU ARE A NEW-comer to these parts, be advised that this is Lantern Festival night, when East meets West in happy blending. The sponsor is Victoria Chinatown Lions Club, the place is Central junior secondary—you'll find it approximately where Fort meets Yates—and I think you'll enjoy this yearly event.

The Chinese lanterns themselves are well worth seeing. They hang in all sizes. Some are modern, some very old.

Whether their skins are of rice paper or oiled silk, they are exquisitely hand-painted. Among the display, you'll find great palace lanterns from an older China, built with six or eight sides and decked with lordly tassels.

The festival atmosphere is compounded of bazaar and picnic, and the stage show that climaxes the evening promises to be brilliant.

This year, mistress of ceremonies Mrs. Jack Tang tells me, some Japanese numbers will be included.

"The last International Lions convention was held in Tokyo," Mrs. Tang explains, "and we decided to make the show from what delegates and their wives saw there, and in Hong Kong."

So, along with Chinese dancers in imported costumes perfect to the last detail, festival-goers can expect geisha girls in flowery kimonas, skits that include a Japanese steam-bath scene, and, by way of contrast, the masked dance of Yin and Yang.

Those are the opposites which, in combination, bring the universe to a state of perfect harmony. So the dancer wears a double mask: pretty-girl face on one side, and man's face on the other.

The Lantern Festival, which opened this afternoon and took time out for a breather at 5:30 p.m., continues from 7 to 10 p.m. We're off to it when the dishes are washed—or more likely, before!

THE PRIME MINISTER has painted a grim word-picture to reporters of those who "pull live fish from the water with hooks dripping blood."

If we live-fish pullers weren't a kindly, tolerant and patient bunch, we might take the remark amiss.

But since we are, non-fishermen Trudeau is welcome to his views. One man's meat is another man's poison, as the saying goes, and there are those among us who would sooner ply rod or even handline than swing in a night-spot.

Although, as the P.M. points out, there are men who have to fish for a living, a lot of us angle simply because we like to.

And we like to not merely because the sport gives us the occasional chance to hoist a fish from its element. It's our passport to the outdoors, alone or with others of like mind.

Further, by a paradox that those outside our sport fail to understand, we entertain a strong affection for the species from which we remove our few—and too often, extremely few—specimens each year. The more skilled the angler, the stronger his views on conservation.

As for Mr. Trudeau, I could wish him hooked to a lively trout in a fast current, on a fly not much bigger than a mosquito.

The experience could change his too-harsh view in a hurry!
